structuralism /'strʌktʃərəˌlɪz(ə)m/ n. a method of analysing and organizing concepts in anthropology, linguistics, psychology, and other cognitive and social sciences in terms of contrasting relations (esp. binary oppositions) among sets of items within conceptual systems. Structuralism had a profound influence on many disciplines in the 20th century. Its origins can be traced to the Swiss linguist Ferdinand de Saussure, who formulated a number of fundamental distinctions, such as that between the signifier and the signified and that between syntagmatic association (word in context) and paradigmatic association (words in sets such as the parts of speech). Saussure's ideas were extended by the French anthropologist Claude Lévi-Strauss, who analysed kinship, myths, taboos, and other subjects on the basis of the relational structure of the terms used. These ideas were further developed by a group of French writers and critics, including Roland Barthes, and their followers in many other countries, with the aim of providing a 'grammar' of narrative, fashion, food, and innumerable other aspects of culture. (See note below.) ● adj. existing, occurring, done, or used under the surface of the sea (submarine cable). □ submariner /-'mærɪnə(r)/ n.

- Classical writers mention attempts to build various submersible craft, but the first authenticated vessel was built by Cornelius Drebbel (1572–1633), a Dutch inventor who manoeuvred his craft below the surface of the River Thames in the 1620s. During the War of American Independence a one-man craft, the Turtle, attempted an underwater attack on a British warship. Also of note was Robert Fulton's Nautilus (1800), which was capable of submerging to a depth of 7.6 m (25 ft). By the early 20th century the internal-combustion engine, electric motor, and new designs of torpedo enabled the development of an effective warship, and submarines played a significant part in both world wars, especially the Second. Major advances since then have been the introduction of nuclear-powered submarines able to proceed submerged indefinitely at high speed, inertial navigation systems enabling the fixing of position without surfacing, better streamlining allowing much higher speeds, and ballistic missiles capable of being fired while submerged.

Suez, Isthmus of /ˈsuːɪz/ an isthmus between the Mediterranean and the Red Sea, connecting Egypt and Africa to the Sinai peninsula and Asia. The port of Suez lies in the south, at the head of the Gulf of Suez, an arm of the Red Sea. The isthmus is traversed by the Suez Canal.

Suez Canal /ˈsuːɪz/ a shipping canal connecting the Mediterranean at Port Said with the Red Sea. Constructed between 1859 and 1869 by Ferdinand de Lesseps, it is 171 km (106 miles) long, providing the shortest route for sea traffic between Europe and Asia. In 1875 it came under British control, after Britain acquired a majority of its shares at Disraeli's instigation, and after 1888 Britain acted as guarantor of its neutral status. Its nationalization by Egypt in 1956 prompted the Suez crisis. It was closed between 1967 and 1975 as a consequence of the Six Day War.

Suez crisis /ˈsuːɪz/ a conflict following the nationalization of the Suez Canal by President Nasser of Egypt in 1956. Britain and France made a military alliance with Israel to regain control of the canal; Israel launched an assault on Sinai, while Britain and France attacked Egyptian bases and landed troops after Nasser's rejection of an ultimatum. Pressure from the US and USSR and criticism from many other countries, however, forced the withdrawal of forces. Among the consequences of the crisis were a weakening of British and French influence in the Middle East and the resignation of the British Prime Minister Anthony Eden.

Sufism /ˈsuːfɪz(ə)m/ n. the mystical system of the Sufis. Sufism is the esoteric dimension of the Islamic faith, the inner way or spiritual path to mystical union with God. Its followers may be ascetics who isolate themselves from society, or (more usually) members of a Sufi order. There are many orders (of which the best known are perhaps the dervish orders), each founded by a devout individual and each having different devotional practices. The movement seems to have begun in the late 7th century as a reaction against the strict formality of orthodox teaching, and reached its peak in the 13th century. Influenced by the beliefs of other faiths, such as Buddhism, but deeply rooted in Islamic spiritualism, Sufism has been responsible for worldwide missionary activity. In the 19th and 20th centuries Sufic orders have sometimes taken on overtly political roles, notably in Libyan resistance to Italian colonial occupation.

- Cane-sugar was known in India in prehistoric times, reaching Europe from the Roman period as a rare spice from the East. In 1493 sugar cane was taken to the West Indies by Christopher Columbus, and has since been introduced into every tropical country. Sugar beet will grow in colder climates and was long used as a vegetable and cattle-food: in 1747 the German chemist Andreas Marggraf found a way of extracting sugar from it in crystalline form. The development of the beet-sugar industry dates from the period of the Napoleonic Wars, when the British blockade prevented the importing of cane-sugar from the West Indies.

- The sun is the central body of the solar system. It provides the light and energy that sustains life on earth and its changing position relative to the earth's axis determines the terrestrial seasons. The sun is a star of a type known as a G2 dwarf, a sphere of hydrogen and helium 1.4 million km in diameter which obtains its energy from nuclear fusion reactions deep within its interior, where the temperature is at about 15 million degrees. The surface is a little under 6,000°C, periodically marked by sunspots where temperatures are 2,000°C cooler and which arise from local intense magnetic fields. Above this region, known as the photosphere, are the chromosphere and corona, regions of much higher temperature. The solar wind, a stream of charged particles from the sun, pervades the solar system to beyond the orbit of Pluto.

[OE sunnandæg, transl. L dies solis, Gk hēmera hēliou day of the sun]

- Sunday began to replace the Jewish sabbath (Saturday) for Christians in the earliest days of Christianity, chiefly in commemoration of the Resurrection. Its observance as a day of rest and worship began to be regulated by both ecclesiastical and civil legislation from the 4th century. In the 19th century Sunday was still a day mainly devoted to duties of piety, but in the later 20th century many restrictions on entertainment, shopping, and drinking alcohol which had been in force since medieval times were lifted, while others remain but arouse controversy.

Sunday school n. a school held on Sundays for children, now only for Christian religious instruction but originally also teaching general subjects. Sunday schools derive from a school set up by Robert Raikes (1736–1811) of Gloucester in 1780.

Sunna /'sʊnə, 'sʌnə/ the body of traditional customs and practices based on Muhammad's words or acts, accepted (together with the Koran) as authoritative by Muslims and followed particularly by Sunni Muslims. [Arab., = form, way, course, rule]

Sunni /'sʊnɪ, 'sʌnɪ/ n. & adj. ● n. (pl. same or Sunnis) 1 the larger of the two main branches of Islam (the other being Shia). (See note below.) 2 an adherent of this branch of Islam. ● adj. of or relating to Sunni. [Arab., = lawful]

- Sunnis constitute the majority community in most Muslim countries other than Iran, where Shiites predominate. Commonly described as orthodox, Sunni Islam differs from Shia in its understanding of the Sunna and in its interpretation of Muhammad's first successor: Sunnis recognize the order of succession of the first four caliphs, whereas the Shiites believe authority begins with Ali, the fourth caliph. There are other differences between the two branches, in particular in community organization and legal practice, but doctrinally Sunni and Shiite Muslims adhere to the same body of tenets.

Sunnite /'sʊnaɪt, 'sʌn-/ n. & adj. ● n. an adherent of the Sunni branch of Islam. ● adj. of or relating to Sunni or Sunnis.

Sun Yat-sen /ˌsʊn jæt'sen/ (also Sun Yixian /ˌsʊn ji:ʃi:'æn/) (1866–1925), Chinese Kuomintang statesman, provisional President of the Republic of China 1911–12 and President of the Southern Chinese Republic 1923–5. Generally regarded in the West as the father of the modern Chinese state, he spent the period 1895–1911 in exile after an abortive attempt to overthrow the Manchus. During this time he issued an early version of his influential 'Three Principles of the People' (nationalism, democracy, and the people's livelihood) and set up a revolutionary society which became the nucleus of the Kuomintang. He returned to China to play a vital part in the revolution of 1911 in which the Manchu dynasty was overthrown. After being elected provisional President, Sun Yat-sen resigned in 1912 in response to opposition from conservative members of the government and established a secessionist government at Guangzhou. He reorganized the Kuomintang along the lines of the Soviet Communist Party and began a period of uneasy cooperation with the Chinese Communists before dying in office.

superconductivity /ˌsu:pəˌkɒndʌk'tɪvɪtɪ, ˌsju:-/ n. Physics the property of having zero electrical resistance, as exhibited in some substances at low absolute temperatures. Discovered in 1911 by H. Kamerlingh Onnes, superconductivity was at first believed to be restricted to some metals at temperatures within a few degrees of absolute zero, and consequently had very limited practical application despite the enormous potential benefits for efficient power transmission and faster electronic circuits. In 1986, however, a class of stable superconductors was discovered (originally at IBM in Zurich) which retained their properties at higher temperatures. These are composite ceramics with sandwich structures, made from mixed oxides of copper, barium, yttrium and other elements; several are now available that display superconductivity above 77 kelvins, the temperature of liquid nitrogen. This makes their use much more practicable, and the first commercial devices appeared in the early 1990s. □ superconducting /-kən'dʌktɪŋ/ adj. superconductive adj.

superconductor /ˌsu:pəkən'dʌktə(r), ˌsju:-/ n. Physics a substance having zero electrical resistance. (See also SUPERCONDUCTIVITY.)

supernova /ˌsuːpəˈnəʊvə, ˌsjuː-/ n. (pl. -novae /-viː/ or -novas) Astron. a star that suddenly increases very greatly in brightness because of an explosion ejecting most of its mass. Supernovae are believed to be supergiant stars which have exhausted the hydrogen and helium fuel in their interiors. Gravitational contraction then leads to runaway thermonuclear reactions involving heavier elements, catastrophically disrupting the star and ejecting debris at speeds of up to a tenth of the speed of light and temperatures of hundreds of thousands of degrees. Within the resulting shell of material may be left a pulsar or a black hole. Though frequently observed in other galaxies, only three supernovae have been recorded in our own Galaxy: by Chinese astronomers in 1054 (this formed the Crab Nebula), by Tycho Brahe in 1572, and by Kepler in 1604. (Cf. NOVA.)

- Surgery can be traced back to prehistoric times, when sharpened flints were used for opening abscesses, scarifying the skin, and even trepanning the skull. In the Middle Ages the Church forbade the practice of surgery by its clerics, whose numbers included most educated doctors, so that surgery was left to barber-surgeons and other lowly practitioners. In 1745 the Company of Surgeons was formed, becoming the Royal College of Surgeons in 1800. In the 19th century the great problems of pain and infection began to be overcome (see ANAESTHETIC, ANTISEPTIC). In the 20th century the surgeon's work began to be aided by X-rays, safer anaesthetics, prompt replacement of blood and fluid loss, and effective antibiotics. Recent advances include open-heart surgery, cryosurgery, microsurgery, and the use of tomography.

surrealism /səˈrɪəlɪz(ə)m/ n. a 20th-century avant-garde movement in art and literature aiming to explore and express the subconscious, and to move beyond the accepted conventions of reality by representing in poetry and art the irrational imagery of dreams. Launched in 1924 by a manifesto of André Breton and having a strong political content, the movement grew out of symbolism and Dada and was strongly influenced by Sigmund Freud. In poetry, there was experiment with 'automatic' writing, the setting down of words unfettered by the conscious mind; in the visual arts surrealism is represented both by a fluid abstract style analogous to this (as in the works of André Masson, Jean Arp, and Joan Miró) and by a more 'realistic' style which relied on deliberately ambiguous combinations of recognizable forms, with René Magritte and Salvador Dali creating a disorientating realist imagery often based on dreams, hallucination, and paranoia. The surrealists readily experimented with new media: Max Ernst developed Dadaist collage and invented frottage, while Man Ray and others experimented with photography and photomontage; in film, the movement strongly influenced directors such as Luis Buñuel. □ surrealist n. & adj. surrealistic /ˌsərɪəˈlɪstɪk/ adj. surrealistically adv. [F surréalisme (as SUR-^{1}, REALISM)]

Sweden /ˈswiːd(ə)n/ (called in Swedish Sverige) a country occupying the eastern part of the Scandinavian peninsula; pop. (1990) 8,590,630, official language, Swedish; capital, Stockholm. Its Germanic and Gothic inhabitants took part in the Viking raids of the Middle Ages. Originally united in the 12th century, Sweden formed part of the Union of Kalmar with Denmark and Norway from 1397 until its re-emergence as an independent kingdom under Gustavus Vasa in 1523. Sweden's influence as a European power peaked during the reign of Gustavus Adolphus in the early 17th century and declined following the defeat of Charles XII in the Great Northern War (1700–21). Between 1814 and 1905 it was united with Norway. A constitutional monarchy, Sweden has pursued a policy of non-alignment, and remained neutral in the two world wars. In 1994 Sweden's application to join the European Community was approved by the European Parliament.

Swedenborg /ˈswiːd(ə)nˌbɔːg/, Emanuel (1688–1772), Swedish scientist, philosopher, and mystic. As a scientist he concerned himself with many subjects, anticipating in his speculative and inventive work later developments such as the nebular theory, crystallography, and flying machines. He became increasingly concerned to show by scientific means the spiritual structure of the universe. However, a series of mystical experiences (1743–5) prompted him to devote the rest of his life to expounding his spiritual beliefs. His doctrines, which blended Christianity with elements of both pantheism and theosophy, were taken up by a group of followers, who founded the New Jerusalem Church in 1787. □ Swedenborgian /ˌswiːd(ə)nˈbɔːgıən/ adj. & n.

Swift /swɪft/, Jonathan (known as Dean Swift) (1667–1745), Irish satirist, poet, and Anglican cleric. He was born in Dublin, a cousin of John Dryden, and divided his life between London and Ireland. His Journal to Stella (1710–13) gives a vivid account of life in London, where he was close to Tory ministers. In 1713 he was made Dean of St Patrick's in Dublin, where he wrote his greatest work, Gulliver's Travels (1726), a satire on human society and institutions in the form of a fantastic tale of travels in imaginary lands. He also involved himself in Irish affairs and wrote many political pamphlets, such as A Modest Proposal (1729), ironically urging that the children of the poor should be fattened to feed the rich. His poems include the Verses on the Death of Dr Swift (1739), in which he reviews his life with pathos and humour.

Switzerland /'swɪtsələnd/ (French Suisse /sɥis/, German Schweiz /ʃvaɪts/, Italian Svizzera /'zvittsera/; also called by its Latin name Helvetia) a landlocked country in central Europe; pop. (1990) 6,673,850; official languages, French, German, Italian, and Romansh; capital, Berne. A mountainous country lying mainly in the Alps and the Jura, Switzerland is divided into French, German, and Italian-speaking areas. The area (occupied by a Celtic people, the Helvetii) was under Roman rule from the 1st century BC until the 5th century AD, and from the 10th century formed part of the Holy Roman Empire. Switzerland emerged as an independent country in the 14th and 15th centuries, when the states or cantons formed a confederation to defeat first their Habsburg overlords and then their Burgundian neighbours. After a period of French domination (1798–1815), the Swiss Confederation's neutrality was guaranteed by the other European powers. Neutral in both world wars, Switzerland has emerged as an international financial centre and as the headquarters of several international organizations such as the Red Cross.

- The French symbolist poets (for example, Mallarmé, Verlaine, and Rimbaud) of the late 19th century reacted against prevailing tendencies of realism and naturalism, laying emphasis on the suggestive or evocative powers of words and the musical properties of language. In the visual arts, the term is widely applied to both French and non-French painters of the fin de siècle, who similarly reacted against the realist insistence on painting from nature, using colour and line as symbolic and expressive tools and dealing in mystical, erotic, or dreamlike subject-matter; Odilon Redon and James Ensor were among its most famous exponents. Symbolism was influential in the development of later theories of abstraction and surrealism in art, while in literature it was an important forerunner of modernism.

OF symphonie f. L symphonia f. Gk sumphōnia (as SYN-, -phōnos f. phōnē sound)]

▪ In the 16th century the term denoted a piece of music for an instrumental ensemble, but since the 18th century it has been applied to a type of orchestral work typically in four movements (in the early years, three): a fast movement, a slow movement, a minuet or scherzo, and a final movement, often in sonata form. Haydn played a significant role in the development of the symphony, as did Mozart, Schubert, and Beethoven. Beethoven's Ninth (or 'Choral') Symphony was the first to use human voice, an innovation taken up notably by Mahler and used in four of his symphonies. After the formidable achievements of Beethoven, the main tradition of the form became associated with Mendelssohn, Schumann, Brahms, Tchaikovsky, and Dvořák. In the 20th century, the form was further extended by composers including Sibelius, Shostakovich, and Vaughan Williams, often with more or fewer than four movements.

Syria /'sɪrɪə/ a country in the Middle East with a coastline on the eastern Mediterranean Sea; pop. (est. 1991) 12,824,000; official language, Arabic; capital, Damascus. In ancient times the name was applied to a much wider area which also encompassed present-day Lebanon, Israel, Jordan, and parts of Iraq and Saudi Arabia. It was the site of various early civilizations, notably that of the Phoenicians, who occupied the coastal plain. Falling successively within the empires of Persia, Macedon, and Rome, it became a centre of Islamic power and civilization from the 7th century and a province of the Ottoman Empire in 1516. After the Turkish defeat in the First World War Syria was mandated to France, becoming independent with the ejection of Vichy troops by the Allies in 1941. From 1958 to 1961 Syria was united with Egypt as the United Arab Republic. Especially since the emergence of Hafiz al-Assad as President (1971), Syria has exercised significant influence in Middle Eastern politics, intervening to enforce a cease-fire in the Lebanese civil war in 1976. Since then, Syrian forces have remained stationed in parts of Lebanon. □ Syrian adj. & n.

▪ Early designs for a mechanical armoured vehicle include one by Leonardo da Vinci (1484), but it was not until the development of the internal-combustion engine and the track mechanism that a really successful vehicle was constructed. This was developed in Britain during the First World War, when the name tank was adopted for purposes of secrecy. Due to resistance from senior army officers tanks were not used en masse until Nov. 1917, when they were immediately successful. Their use in the Second World War was one reason why there was no repetition of the static trench warfare of 1914–18. Different types of armoured vehicles have since been designed for different roles, and the modern tank remains very important for its mobility, relatively high ratio of weapon-power to manpower, and moderate protection against the blast and radioactivity from tactical nuclear weapons.

Tao /taʊ, ˈtoːəʊ/ n. the metaphysical concept central to Chinese philosophy, the absolute principle underlying the universe, combining within itself the principles of yin and yang. By extension Tao also signifies the way, or code of behaviour, that is in harmony with the natural order. The interpretation of Tao in the Tao-te-Ching developed into the philosophical religion of Taoism. [Chin. dao (right) way]

Taoiseach /ˈtiːʃəx/ n. the Prime Minister of the Republic of Ireland. [Ir., = chief, leader]

Taoism /ˈtaʊɪz(ə)m, ˈtɑːəʊ-/ n. one of two major Chinese religious and philosophical systems (the other is Confucianism), traditionally said to have been founded by Lao-tzu in about the 6th century BC. The central concept and goal is the Tao, and its most important text is the Tao-te-Ching. Like Confucianism, Taoism has both a philosophical and a religious aspect. In contrast with the practical teachings of Confucianism, however, philosophical Taoism emphasizes inner contemplation and mystical union with nature; wisdom, learning, and purposive action should be abandoned in favour of simplicity and wu-wei (non-action, or letting things take their natural course). The religious aspect of Taoism developed later, *c.*3rd century AD, incorporating certain Buddhist features and developing a monastic system. In China Taoist religious practice has been suppressed (although it survives in Taiwan), but Taoist thought is still important in Chinese life; it also attracted interest in the West in the 20th century. □ Taoist n. & adj. Taoistic /taʊˈɪstɪk, ˌtoːəʊ-/ adj. [TAO]

[F tarot, It. tarocchi, of unkn. orig.]

- Tarot cards are thought to go back to the 12th century in Europe, though the earliest surviving set is from 1390. Their origin and symbolism is obscure. The tarot pack consists of 78 cards, of which 56 are arranged in four suits of 14 each, numbered similarly to a 52-card pack except that a knight is included among the court cards. The suits are called cups, swords, money, and batons (clubs). The rest of the pack is composed of a series of pictures symbolizing various aspects of life and having links with astrology and the cabbala: emblematic pictures of Death, the Sun, the Moon, the Devil, etc., are included. Renewed interest in the occult has led to a recent revival in the use of tarot cards for fortune-telling. (See also PLAYING CARD.)

▪ Electric telegraphy began in the 1830s on the new railways. In America, Samuel Morse had made his first working model of a telegraph by 1835, using electromagnets; a similar system was developed by Sir William Cooke and Charles Wheatstone in England, where the first practical telegraph was set up between two stations in London in 1837. The telegraph became the standard means of rapid communication within a district, but skilled operators were needed to send and receive messages in Morse code. The introduction of the teleprinter enabled it to continue alongside the telephone system for the transmission of telegrams etc. Though the telegraph has been superseded by the telephone for domestic purposes, it has survived in the form of the telex, which can use any public telecommunications system.

▪ The 'Electrical Speaking Telephone' was invented by Alexander Graham Bell and patented in the US in 1876. The system was quickly adopted, mainly for communication over shorter distances than the telegraph, and by 1887 there were over 100,000 subscribers worldwide. The three basic essentials are a unit with a microphone and earpiece, a system to transmit the signal within acceptable limits of distortion and attenuation, and a (usually automatic) switching system to connect any two telephones. Besides the conventional wires and cables, long distance transmission is facilitated by the use of optical fibres, microwave links, and satellite relays, and digitization permits the accurate transmission of signals. The telephone system is also used to transmit telex, fax, and television signals, and to connect computers via modem links.

telephonist /tɪˈlefənɪst/ n. Brit. an operator in a telephone exchange or at a switchboard.

telephony /tɪˈlefənɪ/ n. the use or a system of telephones.

telephoto /ˈtelɪˌfəʊtəʊ/ n. (pl. -os) (in full telephoto lens) a lens with a longer focal length than standard, giving a narrow field of view and a magnified image.

telerecording /ˈtelɪrɪˌkɔːdɪŋ/ n. a recorded television broadcast.

telesales /ˈtelɪˌseɪlz/ n.pl. selling by means of the telephone.

telescope /ˈtelɪˌskəʊp/ n. & v. ● n. 1 an optical instrument using lenses or mirrors or both to make distant objects appear nearer and larger. (See note below.) 2 = RADIO TELESCOPE. ● v. 1 tr. press or drive (sections of a tube, colliding vehicles, etc.) together so that one slides into another like the sections of a folding telescope. 2 intr. close or be driven or be capable of closing in this way. 3 tr. compress so as to occupy less space or time. [It. telescopio or mod.L telescopium (as TELE-, -SCOPE)]

▪ The refracting telescope that is generally used for terrestrial purposes employs a lens to collect the light, and further lenses or prisms to produce an upright magnified image. It was probably invented independently a number of times before Galileo first used one for astronomy in 1609. Astronomical refractors generally dispense with one lens, so as to let more light through at the expense of an inverted image. The telescope not only advanced scientific knowledge but brought consequences for religious and philosophical thought. The reflecting telescope, using a concave mirror to collect the light, was invented in England in the 16th century. The later Gregorian design (1663) was quickly superseded by the Newtonian (1668) and Cassegrain (1672) designs that form the basis for most large optical telescopes today. The compact catadioptric systems use both lenses and mirrors and include the Schmidt, Schmidt–Cassegrain, and Maksutov designs. Several orbiting telescopes, equipped to receive visible, infrared, or ultraviolet light, X-rays, or high-energy microwave radiation, operate without interference from the earth's atmosphere.

telescopic /ˌtelɪˈskɒpɪk/ adj. 1 a of, relating to, or made with a telescope (telescopic observations). b visible only through a telescope (telescopic stars). 2 (esp. of a lens) able to focus on and magnify distant objects. 3 consisting of sections that telescope. □ telescopic sight a telescope used for sighting on a rifle etc. □ telescopically adv.

televise /ˈtelɪˌvaɪz/ v.tr. transmit by television. □ televisable adj. [back-form. f. TELEVISION] television /ˈtelɪˌvɪʒ(ə)n/ n. 1 a system for reproducing on a screen visual images converted (usu. with sound) into electrical signals and transmitted esp. by radio. (See note below.) 2 (in full television set) a device with a screen for receiving these signals. 3 the medium, art form, or occupation of broadcasting on television; the content of television programmes.

- Television was first demonstrated in 1926 by John Logie Baird, who used mechanical picture scanning, but this was displaced by the electronic system developed by Vladimir Zworykin in the 1930s. The broad principle is that of cinematography, reproducing a series of successive images which the human brain registers as a continuous picture because of the persistence of vision. The television camera divides an image into an array of many thousands of picture elements, which it scans several (typically twenty-five) times a second; each element generates an electrical signal proportional to its brightness. These signals can then be transmitted by radio or cable (or stored on videotape) for eventual reconstitution as an image in a cathode-ray tube in a television receiver. In colour television three images, using picture elements in red, blue, and green, are combined to produced a multicoloured picture. The first regular TV broadcasting service was introduced in Germany in 1935; the BBC began broadcasts in the UK in 1936 and NBC in the US in 1939. Television expanded rapidly across the world in postwar years, colour being introduced in the late 1950s and 1960s. Broadcasting by state and commercial networks has been augmented since the 1970s by multinational satellite and cable organizations. (See also CATHODE RAY, VIDEO.)

[ME tenetz, tenes, etc., app. f. OF tenez 'take, receive', called by the server to an opponent, imper. of tenir take]

- Tennis developed from the sport of real tennis in the Victorian era, when it was a popular social game frequently played in gardens. The aim of tennis is to win points by hitting the ball over the net (but within the court) in such a way that one's opponent is unable to return it. A game is won by the first player or pair to win four points (scored 15, 30, 40, game), unless both reach 40 (deuce), in which case two consecutive points are needed to take the game. A set is won by the player winning at least six games with a margin of two (a tie-break system sometimes operating); a match generally consists of three or five sets. Although tennis is still a popular social game, there is now a financially valuable professional circuit, in which the famous championships held at Wimbledon are a constituent of the 'grand slam' (the others are the US Open, the French Open, and the Australian Open); international teams also compete in the Davis Cup. (See also REAL TENNIS, TABLE TENNIS.)

Tennyson /'tenɪs(ə)n/, Alfred, 1st Baron Tennyson of Aldworth and Freshwater (1809–92), English poet. His first poems, published in the early 1830s, include 'Mariana', 'The Lotos-Eaters', and 'The Lady of Shalott'; a later collection (1842) included 'Morte d'Arthur', the germ of Idylls of the King (1859). His reputation was established by In Memoriam, a long poem concerned with immortality, change, and evolution, written in memory of his friend Arthur Hallam (1811–33); although begun in about 1833, it was not published until 1850. The same year he was made Poet Laureate; thereafter he enjoyed considerable celebrity and was one of the most popular poets of his day, publishing 'The Charge of the Light Brigade' in 1854 and Maud in 1855. His later works include the collection Tiresias and Other Poems (1885) and several dramas.

Thailand /'taɪlænd/ a kingdom in SE Asia; pop. (1990) 56,303,270; official language, Thai; capital, Bangkok. The country was known as Siam until 1939, when it changed its name to Thailand (literally 'land of the free'). For centuries Thais had filtered into the area and by the 13th century had established a number of principalities. A powerful kingdom emerged in the 14th century and engaged in a series of wars with its neighbour Burma. In the 19th century it lost territory in the east to France and in the south to Britain. Thailand was occupied by the Japanese in the Second World War; it supported the US in the Vietnam War, later experiencing a large influx of refugees from Cambodia, Laos, and Vietnam. Absolute monarchy was abolished in 1932, the king remaining head of state; since then Thailand has often been under military rule.

theatre-in-the-round /ˌθɪətərɪnðəˈraʊnd/ n. a form of theatrical presentation in which the audience is seated all round the acting area. One of the earliest forms of theatre, it was probably used for open-air performances, street theatres, and such rustic entertainments as the mummers' play. It was revived in the 20th century — beginning in the Soviet Union in the 1930s — by those who rebelled against the proscenium arch, which they felt to be a barrier between actors and audience.

Theatre of the Absurd n. the name given to the works of a group of dramatists, including Samuel Beckett, Eugène Ionesco, and Harold Pinter, who share the belief that human life is without meaning or purpose and that human beings cannot communicate. Such dramatists abandoned conventional dramatic form and coherent dialogue, the futility of existence being conveyed by illogical and meaningless speeches and ultimately by complete silence. The first and perhaps most characteristic play in this style was Beckett's Waiting for Godot (1952).

thereto /ðeə'tu:/ adv. formal 1 to that or it. 2 in addition, to boot.

theretofore /ˌðeətʊ'fɔ:(r)/ adv. formal before that time.

thereunder /ðeər'ʌndə(r)/ adv. formal 1 in accordance with that. 2 stated below that (in the document etc.).

thereunto /ðeər'ʌntu:/ adv. archaic to that or it.

thereupon /ˌðeərə'pon/ adv. 1 in consequence of that. 2 soon or immediately after that. 3 archaic upon that (of motion or position).

therewith /ðeə'wɪð/ adv. archaic 1 with that. 2 soon or immediately after that.

therewithal /ˌðeəwɪ'ðɔ:l/ adv. archaic in addition, besides.

theriac /'θɪərɪˌæk/ n. archaic an antidote to the bites of poisonous animals, esp. snakes. [L theriaca f. Gk thēriakē antidote, fem. of thēriakos f. thēr wild beast] therianthropic /ˌθɪərɪæn'θropɪk/ adj. of or worshipping beings represented in combined human and animal forms. [Gk thērion dimin. of thēr wild beast + anthrōpos human being] theriomorphic /ˌθɪərɪə'mɔːfɪk/ adj. (esp. of a deity) having an animal form. [as THERIANTHROPIC + Gk morphē form] therm /θɜːm/ n. a unit of heat, esp. as the former statutory unit of gas supplied in the UK equivalent to 100,000 British thermal units or 1.055 × 10^8 joules. [Gk thermē heat] thermae /'θɜːmiː/ n.pl. Gk & Rom. Antiq. public baths. [L f. Gk thermai (pl.) (as THERM)]

thermal /'θɜːm(ə)l/ adj. & n. ● adj. 1 of, for, or producing heat. 2 promoting the retention of heat (thermal underwear). ● n. 1 a rising current of heated air (used by gliders, balloons, and birds to gain height). 2 (in pl.) thermal underwear. □ thermal capacity the number of heat units needed to raise the temperature of a body by one degree. thermal imaging the technique of using the heat given off by an object or substance to produce an image of it or to locate it. thermal neutron Physics a neutron in thermal equilibrium with its surroundings. thermal printer a printer in which fine heated pins form characters on heat-sensitive paper. thermal reactor a nuclear reactor using thermal neutrons. thermal springs springs of naturally hot water. thermal unit a unit for measuring heat (see British thermal unit). □ thermally adv. thermalize v.tr. & intr. (also -ise). thermalization /ˌθɜːməlaɪ'zeɪʃ(ə)n/ n. [F (as THERM)] thermic /'θɜːmɪk/ adj. of or relating to heat.

thermion /'θɜːmɪˌɒn/ n. Physics an ion or electron emitted by a substance at high temperature. [THERMO- + ION] thermionic /ˌθɜːmɪ'onɪk/ adj. Physics of or relating to electrons emitted from a substance at very high temperature. □ thermionic emission the emission of electrons from a heated source. thermionic valve (US tube) a device consisting of a sealed evacuated tube containing two or more electrodes, one of which is heated to produce a flow of electrons in one direction. (See note below.)

- The diode valve (which has two electrodes) functions as a rectifier and was so used by Sir John Ambrose Fleming in 1904. The triode valve (with two electrodes and a grid) was invented in 1906 by Lee De Forest and functioned as an amplifier — a weak signal received in the grid produced a stronger signal in the anode circuit. The thermionic valve was formerly used in all electronic equipment such as radio, radar, and computers, but it has been largely replaced by the transistor.

thermionics /ˌθɜːmɪ'onɪks/ n.pl. (treated as sing.) the branch of science and technology concerned with thermionic emission.

thermistor /θɜː'mɪstə(r)/ n. Electr. a resistor whose resistance is greatly reduced by heating, used for measurement and control. [thermal resistor] thermite /'θɜːmaɪt/ n. (also thermit /-mɪt/) a mixture of finely powdered aluminium and iron oxide that produces a very high temperature on combustion (used in welding and for incendiary bombs). [G Thermit (as THERMO-, -ITE^1)] thermo- /'θɜːməʊ/ comb. form denoting heat. [Gk f. thermos hot, thermē heat] thermochemistry /ˌθɜːməʊ'kemɪstrɪ/ n. the branch of chemistry dealing with the quantities of heat evolved or absorbed during chemical reactions. □ thermochemical adj.

thermocline /'θɜːməʊˌklaɪn/ n. 1 a temperature gradient, esp. an abrupt one in a large body of water. 2 a layer of water in the sea or a lake, marked by an abrupt temperature change. [THERMO- + Gk klinō to slope] thermocouple /'θɜːməʊˌkʌp(ə)l/ n. a thermoelectric device for measuring temperature, consisting of two wires of different metals joined at two points to form a loop. A voltage is developed in the loop proportional to the amount by which the temperature of one junction differs from that of the other junction.

thermodynamics /ˌθɜːməʊdaɪ'næmɪks/ n.pl. (usu. treated as sing.) the science of the relations between heat and other (mechanical, electrical, etc.) forms of energy, and, by extension, of the relationships and interconvertibility of all forms of energy. (See note below.) □ thermodynamic adj. thermodynamical adj. thermodynamically adv. thermodynamicist /-mɪsɪst/ n.

- The laws of thermodynamics describe the general direction of physical change in the universe. The historical development of the subject is complicated; its origins were early 19th-century studies of steam engines by Nicolas Carnot and others, and its main laws were introduced (the first two in their earliest form by Rudolf Clausius in 1850) before heat was understood in terms of the random motion of atoms and molecules. The first law of thermodynamics states the equivalence of heat and work and reaffirms the principle of conservation of energy. The second law states that heat does not of itself pass from a cooler to a hotter body. Another, equivalent, formulation of the second law is that the entropy of a closed system can only increase, that is, the energy in the system will inevitably tend to become distributed in the most probable, i.e. disordered, pattern (see also ENTROPY). The third law (also called Nernst's heat theorem) states that it is impossible to reduce the temperature of a system to absolute zero in a finite number of operations. Implicit in all this is what is sometimes called the zeroth law, that thermodynamic equilibrium is manifested by equality of temperature. Among areas in which the principles and methods of thermodynamics are of great practical importance are the study and design of engines, and the rules governing the direction of chemical and biochemical reactions.

thermogenesis /ˌθɜːməʊ'dʒenɪsɪs/ n. the production of heat, esp. in a human or animal body.

thermogram /'θɜːməˌgræm/ n. a record made by a thermograph.

thermograph /'θɜːməˌgrɑːf/ n. 1 an instrument that gives a continuous record of temperature. 2 an apparatus used to obtain an image produced by infrared radiation from a human or animal body. □ thermographic /ˌθɜːmə'græfɪk/ adj.

thermography /θɜː'mogrəfɪ/ n. Med. the taking or use of infrared thermograms, esp. to detect tumours.

thermolabile /ˌθɜːməʊ'leɪbaɪl, -bɪl/ adj. (of a substance) unstable when heated.

thermoluminescence /ˌθɜːməʊˌluːmɪ'nes(ə)ns/ n. the property of becoming luminescent when pretreated and subjected to high temperatures, used as a means of dating ancient artefacts. □ thermoluminescent adj.

thermolysis /θɜː'molɪsɪs/ n. Chem. decomposition by the action of heat. □ thermolytic /ˌθɜːmə'lɪtɪk/ adj.

thermometer /θə'momɪtə(r)/ n. an instrument for measuring temperature by means of a substance whose expansion and contraction under different degrees of heat and cold are capable of accurate measurement. (See note below.) □ thermometry n. thermometric /ˌθɜːmə'metrɪk/ adj. thermometrical adj. [F thermomètre or mod.L thermometrum (as THERMO-, -METER)]

- The earliest form was an air-thermometer invented by Galileo before 1597; alcohol thermometers were used *c.*1650. The idea of a fixed zero (originally the freezing-point of water) was introduced by Robert Hooke in 1665 and developed by Gabriel Fahrenheit, who manufactured mercury thermometers from *c.*1720. The most familiar type of thermometer consists of a slender hermetically sealed glass tube with a fine bore and external graduations, having a bulb at the lower end filled with mercury or alcohol that rises as a column in the tube on expansion. Thermometers were first introduced into clinical medicine in the UK 1863–4 by William Aitken (1825–92).

thermonuclear /ˌθɜːməʊ'njuːklɪə(r)/ adj. 1 relating to or using nuclear reactions, e.g. fusion, that occur only at very high temperatures. 2 of, relating to, or involving weapons in which explosive force is produced by thermonuclear reactions (thermonuclear war).

thermophile /'θɜːməʊˌfaɪl/ n. & adj. (also thermophil /-fɪl/) ● n. a bacterium etc. growing optimally at high temperatures. ● adj. of or being a thermophile. □ thermophilic /ˌθɜːməʊ'fɪlɪk/ adj.

thermopile /'θɜːməʊˌpaɪl/ n. a set of thermocouples esp. arranged for measuring small quantities of radiant heat.

thermoplastic /ˌθɜːməʊ'plæstɪk/ adj. & n. ● adj. (of a substance) that becomes plastic on heating and hardens on cooling, and is able to repeat these processes. ● n. a thermoplastic substance.

Thermopylae /θə'mopɪˌliː/ a pass between the mountains and the sea in Greece, about 200 km (120 miles) north-west of Athens, originally narrow but now much widened by the recession of the sea. In 480 BC it was the scene of the heroic defence by 6,000 Greeks, under the command of Leonidas (died *c.*480 BC), against the Persian army of Xerxes I. The defenders included 300 Spartans who fought to the death to delay the Persian advance. The pass was the traditional invasion route from northern Greece and was subsequently used by the Gauls in 279 BC and by Cato the Elder in 191 BC.

Thermos /ˈθɜːməs/ n. (in full Thermos flask) propr. a vacuum flask. [Gk (as THERMO-)] thermosetting /ˈθɜːməʊˌsetɪŋ/ adj. (of plastics) setting permanently when heated. □ thermoset adj.

thermosphere /ˈθɜːməˌsfɪə(r)/ n. the region of the atmosphere above the mesopause and below the height at which it ceases to have the properties of a continuous medium, characterized throughout by an increase in temperature with height.

thermostable /ˌθɜːməʊˈsteɪb(ə)l/ adj. (of a substance) stable when heated.

thermostat /ˈθɜːməˌstæt/ n. a device that automatically regulates temperature, or that activates a device when the temperature reaches a certain point. □ thermostatic /ˌθɜːməˈstætɪk/ adj. thermostatically adv. [THERMO- + Gk statos standing] thermotaxis /ˌθɜːməʊˈtæksɪs/ n. Biol. movement of an organism towards or away from a source of heat. □ thermotactic adj. thermotaxic adj.

thermotropism /ˌθɜːməʊˈtrəʊpɪz(ə)m/ n. the growing or bending of a plant towards or away from a source of heat. □ thermotropic /-ˈtrəʊpɪk, -ˈtrɒpɪk/ adj.

theropod /ˈθerəˌpod/ n. & adj. ● n. a saurischian dinosaur of the group Theropoda, comprising mainly bipedal carnivores and including tyrannosaurs and the possible ancestors of birds. ● adj. of or relating to this group. [mod.L f. Gk thēr wild beast + pous pod- foot] thesaurus /θɪˈsɔːrəs/ n. (pl. thesauri /-raɪ/ or thesauruses) 1 a book that lists words in groups of synonyms and related concepts. 2 a dictionary or encyclopedia. [L f. Gk thēsauros treasure]

these pl. of THIS.

Theseus /ˈθiːsɪəs/ Gk Mythol. the son of Poseidon (or, in another account, of Aegeus, king of Athens) and husband of Phaedra. The legendary hero of Athens, he slew the Cretan Minotaur with the help of Ariadne and was successful in numerous other exploits.

thesis /ˈθiːsɪs/ n. (pl. theses /-siːz/) 1 a proposition to be maintained or proved. 2 a dissertation, esp. by a candidate for a degree. 3 (also /ˈθesɪs/) an unstressed syllable or part of a metrical foot in Greek or Latin verse (opp. ARSIS). [ME f. LL f. Gk, = putting, placing, a proposition etc. f. the- root of tithēmi to place]

thesp /θesp/ n. colloq. a thespian. [abbr.]

thespian /ˈθespɪən/ adj. & n. ● adj. of or relating to tragedy or drama. ● n. an actor or actress. [THESPIS]

Thespis /ˈθespɪs/ (6th century BC), Greek dramatic poet. He is regarded as the founder of Greek tragedy, having been named by Aristotle as the originator of the role of the actor in addition to the traditional chorus.

Thess. abbr. Epistle to the Thessalonians (New Testament).

Thessalonian /ˌθesəˈləʊnɪən/ adj. & n. hist. ● adj. of ancient Thessalonica (Thessaloníki). ● n. a native of ancient Thessalonica.

Thessalonians, Epistle to the either of two books of the New Testament, the earliest letters of St Paul, written from Corinth to the new Church at Thessalonica.

Thessaloníki /ˌθesələˈniːkɪ/ (also Salonica /səˈlɒnɪkə/, Latin Thessalonica /ˌθesəˈlonɪkə, -ləˈnaɪkə/) a seaport in NE Greece; pop. (1991) 378,000. Founded in 315 BC, it became the capital of the Roman province of Macedonia and an important city of Byzantium. It fell to the Turks in 1430, remaining a part of the Ottoman Empire until 1912. Now a major port and the second largest city in Greece, it is the capital of the present-day Greek region of Macedonia.

Thirty Years War a prolonged European war 1618–48. Beginning as a struggle between the Catholic Holy Roman emperor and some of his German Protestant states, the war gradually drew in most of the major European military powers, and developed into a fight for continental hegemony with France, Sweden, Spain, and the Holy Roman Empire as the major protagonists. The result of three decades of intermittent hostilities, which ended with the Treaty of Westphalia, was the emergence of Bourbon France as the pre-eminent European power and the devastation of much of Germany, which had throughout been the centre of military activity.

Thomas^1 /ˈtoməs/, Dylan (Marlais) (1914–53), Welsh poet. He moved to London in 1934 and worked in journalism and broadcasting while continuing to write poetry. He won recognition with Deaths and Entrances (1946), and continued his success with works such as Portrait of the Artist as a Young Dog (1940; prose); Adventures in the Skin Trade, an unfinished novel, was published posthumously in 1955. Shortly before his death in New York of alcohol poisoning, he narrated on radio his best-known work, Under Milk Wood, a portrait of a small Welsh town, interspersing poetic alliterative prose with songs and ballads.

Thomas^2 /ˈtoməs/, (Philip) Edward (1878–1917), English poet. He wrote mostly journalistic prose and reviews before being encouraged by Robert Frost in 1914 to concentrate on writing poetry; most of his work was written while serving in the First World War and was published posthumously after he was killed at Arras in 1917. His work offers a sympathetic but unidealized depiction of rural English life, adapting colloquial speech rhythms to poetic metre.

Thomas, St an Apostle. He said that he would not believe that Christ had risen again until he had seen and touched his wounds (John 20:24–9); the story is the origin of the nickname 'doubting Thomas'. According to tradition he preached in SW India (see MALABAR CHRISTIANS). Feast day, 21 Dec.

Thomas à Kempis /ə ˈkempɪs/ (born Thomas Hemerken) (*c.*1380–1471), German theologian. Born at Kempen, near Cologne (from where he gets his name), he became an Augustinian canon in Holland. He wrote a number of ascetic treatises and is the probable author of On the Imitation of Christ (*c.*1415–24), a manual of spiritual devotion.

Thompson^1 /ˈtomps(ə)n/, Daley (b.1958), English athlete. He won a number of major decathlon titles in the 1980s, including gold medals in the Olympic Games of 1980 and 1984.

Thompson^2 /ˈtomps(ə)n/, Francis (1859–1907), English poet. His best-known work uses powerful imagery to convey intense religious experience, and includes the poems 'The Hound of Heaven' and 'The Kingdom of God'. He published three volumes of verse (1893–7) and much literary criticism in periodicals. He died from the combined effects of opium addiction and tuberculosis.

Thomson^1 /ˈtɒms(ə)n/, James (1700–48), Scottish poet. His poem in four books The Seasons (1726–30) anticipated the romantic movement in its treatment of nature; the text was adapted for Haydn's oratorio of that name (1799–1801). He also co-wrote the masque Alfred (1740) with David Mallet (*c.*1705–65); it contains the song 'Rule, Britannia', whose words have been attributed to him.

Thomson^2 /ˈtɒms(ə)n/, James (1834–82), Scottish poet. He is chiefly remembered for the poem 'The City of Dreadful Night' (1874), a powerful evocation of a half-ruined city where the narrator encounters tormented shades wandering in a Dantesque living hell, presided over by Melancolia.

Thomson^3 /ˈtɒms(ə)n/, Sir Joseph John (1856–1940), English physicist, discoverer of the electron. While professor of physics at Cambridge (1884–1918) he consolidated the reputation of the Cavendish Laboratory. From his experiments on the deflection of cathode rays in magnetic and electric fields, Thomson deduced that he was dealing with particles smaller than the atom. These he initially called corpuscles and later electrons, a word coined by the Irish mathematical physicist George Johnstone Stoney (1826–1911). Thomson received the 1906 Nobel Prize for physics for his researches into the electrical conductivity of gases. His son Sir George Paget Thomson (1892–1975) shared the 1937 Nobel Prize for physics for his discovery of electron diffraction by crystals.

Thomson^{4} /'toms(ə)n/, Roy Herbert, 1st Baron Thomson of Fleet (1894–1976), Canadian-born British newspaper proprietor and media entrepreneur. In 1931 he opened his own radio station in northern Ontario. He then built up his North American press and radio holdings before acquiring his first British newspaper, the Scotsman, in 1952, the year he settled in Britain. He subsequently added the Sunday Times (1959) and The Times (1966) to his acquisitions, by which time the Thomson Organization had become an international corporation, with interests in publishing, printing, television, and travel.

Thomson^{5} /'toms(ə)n/, Tom (full name Thomas John Thomson) (1877–1917), Canadian painter. A pioneering artist of Canada's wilderness, he began sketching in Algonquin Park, Ontario, in the spring of 1912, returning there in subsequent summers. Major paintings include Northern Lake (1913), The West Wind (1917), and The Jack Pine (1917). Thomson's premature death at Canoe Lake, Algonquin Park, remains a mystery.

Thoreau /'θɔːrəʊ/, Henry David (1817–62), American essayist and poet. Together with his friend and mentor Ralph Waldo Emerson he is regarded as a key figure of Transcendentalism. He is best known for his book Walden, or Life in the Woods (1854), an account of a two-year experiment in self-sufficiency when he built a wooden hut by Walden Pond, near his home town of Concord, Massachusetts, and sought to live according to his ideals of simplicity and closeness to nature. His essay on civil disobedience (1849), in which he argues the right of the individual to refuse to pay taxes when conscience dictates, influenced Mahatma Gandhi's policy of passive resistance.

thorium /'θɔːrɪəm/ n. a radioactive white metallic chemical element (atomic number 90; symbol Th). A member of the actinide series, thorium was discovered by Jöns Berzelius in 1828. It became economically important after 1885 when its dioxide began to be widely used as an incandescent material in gas mantles. Thorium has a variety of industrial uses and is of increasing importance as a nuclear fuel. Thorium's radioactive properties were discovered in 1898; it is one of the most abundant radioactive elements in the earth's crust and its main source is the mineral monazite. [THOR]

- Local solar time is four minutes later for each degree travelled westwards, and different towns originally kept their own local time. In the mid-19th century the mean time at the Royal Greenwich Observatory in London was adopted by railways throughout Great Britain, and in 1880 Greenwich Mean Time (GMT) became the legal time for the whole country. Both the Greenwich meridian and GMT were accepted as international standards in 1884, after which the earth was divided into 25 time zones each having a standard time so many hours (and half hours) in advance of or behind Greenwich. GMT is now known formally as Universal Time.

Titian^{1} /ˈtɪʃ(ə)n/ (Italian name Tiziano Vecellio) (*c.*1488–1576), Italian painter. The most important painter of the Venetian school, he was first a pupil of Bellini and Giorgione, and completed a number of the latter's unfinished paintings after his death in 1510. Titian subsequently experimented with vivid colours and often broke conventions of composition; his Madonna with Saints and Members of the Pesaro Family (1519–*c.*28) was innovative in not having the Madonna in the centre of the picture. He also painted many sensual mythological works, including Bacchus and Ariadne (*c.*1518–23). He was much in demand throughout Europe for his portraits, which were notable for the characterization of their sitters; he was appointed court painter by the Holy Roman Emperor Charles V in 1533.

Tito /ˈtiːtəʊ/ (born Josip Broz) (1892–1980), Yugoslav Marshal and statesman, Prime Minister 1945–53 and President 1953–80. Born in Croatia, he served in the Austro-Hungarian army during the First World War and was captured by the Russians in 1915. After escaping, he fought with the Bolsheviks in the Russian Revolution and became an active Communist organizer on returning to his country in 1920. Tito responded to the German invasion of Yugoslavia (1941) by organizing a Communist resistance movement using guerrilla tactics. His success in resisting the Germans earned him Allied support and he emerged as head of the new government at the end of the war. Tito defied Stalin over policy in the Balkans in 1948, proceeding to establish Yugoslavia as a non-aligned Communist state with a federal constitution. He was made President for life in 1974.

[Sp. tabaco, of Amer. Indian orig.]

- Tobacco was originally used by American Indians as a narcotic drink, but by the time that Christopher Columbus arrived they were smoking it. They used it for ceremonial purposes and believed it to have medicinal properties, which was the main reason for taking it back to Europe. The diplomat Jean Nicot (see NICOTIANA) is said to have introduced it to France in 1556. Tobacco was originally smoked mainly in pipes and cigars; cigarettes did not become socially acceptable until the late 18th century. It is usually made from the leaves of common tobacco (Nicotiana tabacum) and sometimes from wild tobacco (N. rusticum); many varieties have been developed and a number of different additives and preparation techniques are used. The principal narcotic drug in tobacco is nicotine, which accounts for its addictive nature. Increasing concerns over the links between cigarette smoking and lung cancer, heart disease, and other health problems have caused many countries to take steps to discourage smoking. The taxing of tobacco is, however, a major source of revenue for most governments.

Ir. f. tóir pursue.]

▪ The term was originally used in the 17th century of dispossessed Irish who became outlaws and lived by plundering English settlers and soldiers. It became used as an abusive nickname for those who opposed the exclusion of the Catholic Duke of York (later James II) from the succession to the Crown — reputedly because the Duke was seen to favour the Irish. As a party, however, the Tories were associated with the Church of England and with non-toleration of religious Nonconformists and Catholics. They were successful under Queen Anne but after the succession of the Hanoverian George I suffered as a result of their links with the Jacobite cause: some Tories supported the deposed Stuarts, despite their Catholicism, as the possessors of the hereditary right to rule. After 1760 the Tories accepted George III and the established order in Church and state; their fortunes rose as opponents of the French Revolution, and they held office almost continuously between 1760 and 1830. In the following decades, particularly under the influence of Sir Robert Peel, the nature of the party changed, and it became known by the name Conservative. (See also TAMWORTH MANIFESTO.)

Trades Union Congress (abbr. TUC) the official representative body of British trade unions, founded in 1868, which meets annually to discuss matters of common concern. It is made up of delegates of the affiliated unions.

trade union n. (also trades union) an organized association of workers in a trade, group of trades, or a profession, formed to protect and further the workers' rights and interests. Although prefigured by the medieval artisans' guilds, trade unions were a product of the Industrial Revolution in Britain. They expanded in size and importance during the 19th century, despite being subject, particularly in the earlier years, to repressive legislation such as the Combination Acts. The Trades Union Congress first met in 1868, and the position of unions in Britain was legally recognized by the Trade Union Act of 1871; the unions began assuming a more assertive and politicized outlook towards the end of the century, playing a central role in the formation of the Labour Party. The trade-union movement achieved true national importance in the early 20th century, with smaller unions tending to amalgamate into larger national organizations and white-collar workers joining in greater numbers. After confrontations between the government and unions in the 1960s and 1970s the trade wind n. a wind blowing steadily towards the equator from the north-east (in the northern hemisphere) or south-east (in the southern hemisphere), especially at sea. The name was originally applied to any wind that 'blows trade', i.e. blows in a constant course or way: it had nothing to do with commercial navigation, although the term was often later understood in that sense. Two belts of trade winds encircle the earth, blowing from the tropical high-pressure belts to the low-pressure zone at the equator; the system is seasonally displaced respectively to the north and south of the equator in the northern and southern summers.

Trafalgar, Battle of /trə'fælgə(r)/ a naval battle fought on 21 Oct. 1805 off the cape of Trafalgar on the south coast of Spain, a decisive engagement of the Napoleonic Wars. The British fleet under Nelson (who was killed in the action) won a victory over the combined fleets of France and Spain, which were attempting to clear the way for Napoleon's projected invasion of Britain. Superior British seamanship and gunnery ensured the surrender of more than half the Franco-Spanish fleet after several hours of hard fighting, and Napoleon was never again able to mount a serious threat to British naval supremacy.

▪ Tragedy in the Western tradition began in ancient Greece, where it developed in the verse plays of Aeschylus, Sophocles, and Euripides. From their works Aristotle made an influential analysis of tragedy in his Poetics (4th century BC): he stated that tragedy is the imitation of an action that is serious and complete, and that achieves a catharsis in its audience through the arousing of pity and terror; the protagonist is often brought to disaster by hamartia (variously translated as 'error' or 'fatal flaw'), often in the form of hubris (excessive pride or presumption) which is punished by the gods or by fate. Roman tragedy, as represented by Seneca, tended to be more sensational and rhetorical; it set the pattern for the bloody Elizabethan and Jacobean writers like Kyd, Marlowe, Webster, and Middleton (see also REVENGE TRAGEDY). The major tragedies of that period, however, are those by Shakespeare (Othello, Hamlet, Macbeth, King Lear), which use a larger cast of characters and wider variety of scenes than their classical predecessors. In 17th-century France Corneille and Racine wrote tragedies strictly governed by rules derived from Aristotle, in particular observance of the three unities (see UNITY 5). As a genre tragedy did not revive seriously until the late 19th century; Ibsen, Strindberg, and Chekhov, together with 20th-century dramatists such as Eugene O'Neill, wrote tragic plays in prose about ordinary rather than noble characters. Some novels, such as Hardy's The Mayor of Casterbridge, can also be described as tragedies.

Traherne /trə'hɜːn/, Thomas (1637–74), English prose writer and poet. His major prose work Centuries, originally published in 1699, faded into obscurity until it was rediscovered on a London bookstall along with some poems in manuscript form in 1896; it was republished as Centuries of Meditation (1908). Its account of his early intuitions constitutes an important contribution to the portrayal of childhood experience in English literature. His poems were republished as Poetical Works (1903).

(See note below.) 2 a four-wheeled vehicle used in coal mines. □ tram-road hist. a road with wooden, stone, or metal wheel-tracks. [MLG & MDu. trame balk, beam, barrow-shaft]

- The tram was invented in New York in 1830 by John Stephenson, an Irish coach-builder. Trams were originally horse-drawn (see RAILWAY), and then steam power was used for either self-propulsion or hauling by cable. The great expansion came with electric traction in the 1890s, current being collected either from overhead wires or (sometimes) from a conductor rail in the road surface. The famous streetcars of San Francisco are cable-hauled. The motor bus and the electric trolleybus, with their less restricted course, virtually replaced trams in both Britain and the US. However, some transport planners advocate a return to the tram on grounds of economy and its pollution-free operation. Trams have remained in use in many European cities.

transformational grammar n. (also transformational-generative grammar) a grammar consisting of a set of rules which generate all and only the grammatical sentences of a language. Some of these rules are phrase-structure rules, which, when applied to the lexicon of the language, generate the logical deep structure of its sentences. Others are transformational rules, which generate the surface structure of sentences from their deep structure, and which account for logically related structures, for example active and passive sentences. Transformational grammar was first described theoretically by Noam Chomsky in Syntactic Structures (1957), although linguistic transformational rules had first been proposed by the American linguist Zellig S. Harris (1909–92).

transformer /trænsˈfɔːmə(r), troːns-/ n. 1 an apparatus for reducing or increasing the voltage of an alternating current. 2 a person or thing that transforms.

transfuse /trænsˈfjuːz, troːns-/ v.tr. 1 a permeate (purple dye transfused the water). b instil (an influence, quality, etc.) into (transfused enthusiasm into everyone). 2 a transfer (blood) from one person or animal to another. b inject (liquid) into a blood vessel to replace lost fluid. □ transfusion /-ˈfjuːʒ(ə)n/ n. [ME f. transgenic /trænzˈdʒenɪk, troːnz-/ adj. Biol. (of an animal or plant) having genetic material artificially introduced from another species.

transgress /trænzˈgres, troːnz-/ v.tr. (also absol.) 1 go beyond the bounds or limits set by (a commandment, law, etc.); violate; infringe. 2 Geol. (of the sea) spread over (the land). □ transgressive adj. transgressor n. transgression /-ˈgreʃ(ə)n/ n. [F transgresser or L transgredi transgress- (as TRANS-, gradi go)] tranship var. of TRANSSHIP.

transhumance /trænzˈhjuːməns, troːnz-/ n. the seasonal moving of livestock to a different region. [F f. transhumer f. L TRANS- + humus ground] transient /ˈtrænzɪənt, ˈtroːnz-/ adj. & n. ● adj. 1 of short duration; momentary; passing; impermanent (life is transient; of transient interest). 2 Mus. serving only to connect; inessential (a transient chord). ● n. 1 a temporary visitor, worker, etc. 2 Electr. a brief current etc. □ transience n. transiency n. transiently adv. [L transire (as TRANS-, ire go)] transilluminate /ˌtrænzɪˈluːmɪˌneɪt, ˌtroːnz-/ v.tr. pass a strong light through for inspection, esp. for medical diagnosis. □ transillumination /-ˌluːmɪˈneɪʃ(ə)n/ n.

transire /trænˈsaɪə(r), troːn-/ n. Brit. a customs permit for the passage of goods. [L transire go across (as TRANSIENT)] transistor /trænˈzɪstə(r), troːn-, -ˈsɪstə(r)/ n. 1 a semiconductor device with usu. three connections, capable of amplification in addition to rectification. (See note below.) 2 (in full transistor radio) a portable radio with transistors. [portmanteau word, f. TRANSFER + RESISTOR]

- The transistor, developed by William Shockley and colleagues at the Bell Telephone Laboratories in the US in 1948, ushered in the era of solid-state electronics. In its simplest form the transistor is a sandwich of three layers of semiconducting materials, usually silicon-based, forming a system of three terminals separated by two junctions. They depend for their operation on the fact that the electrical properties of semiconductors can be varied by doping with small amounts of impurities. Transistors can be made to carry out all the functions of thermionic valves, such as amplification and rectification, with the advantages of greatly reduced size (down to the scale of miniaturized printed circuits), lower heat output and operating voltage, and much higher reliability and robustness.

transit /ˈtrænzɪt, ˈtroːnz-/ n. & v. ● n. 1 the act or process of going, conveying, or being conveyed, esp. over a distance (transit by rail; made a transit of the lake). 2 a passage or route (the overland transit). 3 Astron. a the apparent passage of a celestial object across the meridian of a place. b the passage of an inferior planet across the face of the sun, or of a moon across the face of a planet. 4 N. Amer. the local conveyance of passengers on public routes. ● v. (transited, transiting) 1 tr. make a transit across. 2 intr. make a transit. □ in transit while going or being conveyed. transit camp a camp for the temporary accommodation of soldiers, refugees, etc. transit-circle (or -instrument) an instrument for observing the transit of a celestial object across the meridian. transit-compass (or -theodolite) a surveyor's instrument for measuring a horizontal angle. transit-duty duty paid on goods passing through a country. transit lounge a lounge at an airport for passengers waiting between flights. transit visa a visa allowing only passage through a country. [ME f. L transitus f. transire (as TRANSIENT)] transition /trænˈzɪʃ(ə)n, troːn-/ n. 1 a passing or change from one place, state, condition, etc., to another (an age of transition; a transition from plain to hills). 2 Mus. a momentary modulation. 3 (in the arts) a change from one style to another, esp. Archit. from Norman to Early English. 4 Physics a change of an atomic nucleus or orbital electron from one quantum state to another, with emission or absorption of radiation. □ transition point Physics the point at which different phases of the same substance can be in equilibrium. □ transitional adj. transitionally adv. transitionary adj. [F transition or L transitio (as TRANSIT)] transition metal n. (also transition element) Chem. any of the set of elements occupying a central block (Groups IVB–VIII, IB, and IIB, or 4–12) in the periodic table, and including iron, copper, silver, etc. They are all dense metals; chemically they show variable valency and a strong tendency to form coordination compounds, and many of their compounds are coloured.

transitive /ˈtrænzɪtɪv, ˈtrɑːnz-/ adj. 1 Gram. (of a verb or sense of a verb) that takes a direct object (whether expressed or implied), e.g. saw in saw the donkey, saw that she was ill (opp. INTRANSITIVE). 2 Logic (of a relation) such as to be valid for any two members of a sequence if it is valid for every pair of successive members. □ transitively adv. transitiveness n. transitivity /ˌtrænzɪˈtɪvɪtɪ, ˌtrɑːnz-/ n. [LL transitivus (as TRANSIT)]

Trent /trent/ the chief river of central England, which rises in Staffordshire and flows 275 km (170 miles) generally north-eastwards, uniting with the River Ouse 25 km (15 miles) west of Hull to form the Humber estuary.

Trent, Council of an ecumenical council of the Roman Catholic Church, held in three sessions between 1545 and 1563 in Trento, northern Italy. Prompted by the opposition of the Reformation, the council clarified and redefined the Church's position on certain issues (rejecting, for example, Luther's doctrine of justification by faith alone), abolished many of the abuses that had been prevalent, and strengthened the authority of the papacy; it also ordered a revision of the Vulgate. The overall effect was to provide the Church with a solid foundation for the Counter-Reformation.

Trevithick /trə'vɪθɪk/, Richard (1771–1833), English engineer. Known as 'the Cornish Giant', he was the most notable engineer from the Cornish mining industry, where steam engines were first widely used. His chief contribution was in the use of high-pressure steam to drive a double-acting engine, which could then be both compact and portable. Trevithick built many stationary engines and a few that were self-propelled — including the world's first railway locomotive (1804), designed for an ironworks in South Wales. He also applied the principle in other enterprises, though his attempt to introduce steam power to silver mines in Peru proved financially disastrous.

- The Triads were apparently formed in China *c.*1730 with the purpose of ousting the Manchu dynasty, although their origins may be far older. The name was used for various fraternal and criminal organizations sharing a similar ritual, in which a triangle was of importance in initiation ceremonies. In the mid-19th century the Triads grew in strength, acquiring a large membership in southern China and among Chinese communities in various foreign countries. Thereafter they played an erratic role in China: some societies assisted the Kuomintang leader Sun Yat-sen, while others acquired political influence in Shanghai and other cities. Today the Triads often flourish among overseas Chinese, allegedly being involved in gambling, prostitution, drugs, and other organized crime.

Trotsky /ˈtrɒtskɪ/, Leon (born Lev Davidovich Bronshtein) (1879–1940), Russian revolutionary. Joining the Bolsheviks in 1917, he helped to organize the October Revolution with Lenin, and built up the Red Army that eventually defeated the White Russian forces in the Russian Civil War. After Lenin's death he alienated Stalin and others with his view that socialism within the Soviet Union could not come about until revolution had occurred in western Europe and worldwide. Trotsky was eventually defeated by Stalin in the struggle for power, being expelled from the party in 1927 and exiled in 1929. After settling in Mexico in 1937, he was murdered three years later by a Stalinist assassin.

Trotskyism /ˈtrotskɪˌɪz(ə)m/ n. the principles of Leon Trotsky, who believed in the theory of continuing revolution rather than the more pragmatic ideas of state Communism generally accepted in Russia in the post-revolutionary era. With the defeat and disgrace of their leader in the power struggle following the death of Lenin, the Trotskyists were branded by the successful Stalinists as perverters of the Revolution. Trotskyism has generally included elements of anarchism and syndicalism, but the term has come to be used indiscriminately to describe a great many forms of radical socialism. □ Trotskyist n. Trotskyite n. derog.

trotting /ˈtrotɪŋ/ n. a form of horse-racing (also called harness racing) in which a horse pulls a two-wheeled vehicle (a sulky) and its driver with a trotting or pacing gait. Similar races with chariots were held in Asia Minor as early as 1350 BC, and constituted one of the favourite sports in the Roman Empire; trotting in its modern form arose in the early 19th century, and is now popular particularly in the US, Australia, and New Zealand.

troubadour /ˈtru:bəˌdɔ:(r)/ n. 1 any of a number of French medieval lyric poets composing and singing in Provençal during the 12th and early 13th centuries (and perhaps earlier). (See note below.) 2 a singer or poet. [F f. Prov. trobador f. trobar find, invent, compose in verse]

▪ The medieval troubadours are famous for the complexity of their verse forms and for the conception of chivalry and courtly love which prevails in their poems. They flourished in the courts of Spain, Italy, and France, and through their influence on the northern French poets and on the German Minnesingers they had a major effect on all the subsequent development of European lyric poetry. As well as love poetry they also composed moralizing, satirical, political, and military poems.

Troy /trɔɪ/ (also called Ilium) in Homeric legend, the city of King Priam that was besieged for ten years by the Greeks (see TROJAN WAR). Troy was regarded as having been a purely legendary city until Heinrich Schliemann identified the mound of Hissarlik on the NE Aegean coast of Turkey as the site of Troy. Schliemann's excavations showed the mound to be composed of nine main strata, dating from the early Bronze Age to the Roman era. The stratum known as Troy VIIa is believed to be that of the Homeric city; it was apparently sacked and destroyed by fire in the mid-13th century BC, a period coinciding with the Mycenaean civilization of Greece.

Truman /'tru:mən/, Harry S (1884–1972), American Democratic statesman, 33rd President of the US 1945–53. As Vice-President, he automatically took office on Franklin Roosevelt's death in 1945. One of his first actions was to authorize the use of the atom bomb against Hiroshima and Nagasaki in 1945 to end the war with Japan. At home Truman put forward an extensive social programme which was largely blocked by Congress, although racial segregation in the armed forces and in federally funded schools was ended. In 1948 his administration introduced the Marshall Plan of emergency aid to war-shattered European countries and helped to establish NATO the following year. He later involved the US in the Korean War. (See also TRUMAN DOCTRINE.)

Truman Doctrine the principle that the US should give support to countries or peoples threatened by Soviet forces or Communist insurrection. First expressed in 1947 by US President Truman in a speech to Congress seeking aid for Greece and Turkey, the doctrine was seen by the Communists as an open declaration of the cold war.

Tudor^1 /ˈtjuːdə(r)/ the English royal house which ruled England from 1485 (Henry VII) until the death of Elizabeth I (1603). The Tudors were descended from Owen Tudor, who married Catherine, widowed queen of Henry V. ● adj. of the architectural style prevailing in England during the reigns of the Tudors; of or resembling the domestic architecture of this period. (See note below.) □ Tudor rose a conventionalized five-lobed decorative figure of a rose, especially a combination of the red and white roses of York and Lancaster adopted as a badge by Henry VII.

▪ Tudor architecture is marked by the final development of Perpendicular or English Gothic style and the introduction of decorative elements from the Italian Renaissance. Brickwork (frequently patterned) dominated domestic architecture, which typically featured half-timbering, elaborate chimneys, many gables, rich oriel windows, and much interior panelling and moulded plasterwork. The architecture of the later Tudor period, during the reign of Elizabeth I (1558–1603), is usually distinguished as 'Elizabethan'. Stone was employed as a material for some larger buildings, and there was a richer use of Italian and Flemish ornamentation.

turbine /'tɜ:baɪn/ n. a machine for producing continuous mechanical power, in which a fluid (water, steam, air, or a gas) is accelerated to a high speed in a channel or nozzle and the resulting jet or jets directed at a rotating wheel with radial vanes or scoops. In the 19th century water turbines were developed, chiefly in France and Germany, to drive machinery in factories. The steam turbine was suggested 2,000 years ago by Hero of Alexandria, but the first practical one was devised by Sir Charles Parsons in 1884. Steam turbines have replaced the steam engine in electrical power stations, while hydroelectric power stations use water turbines. (See also PARSONS, GAS TURBINE.) [F f. Turner /ˈtɜːnə(r)/, J(oseph) M(allord) W(illiam) (1775–1851), English painter. The originality of his work and the extent to which it anticipated later styles such as impressionism and abstract art made him a highly controversial figure in his day. He made his name with stormy seascapes such as The Shipwreck (1805) and landscapes painted in the grand Italian style of Claude Lorrain, as in Crossing the Brook (1815). From 1819, Turner made several visits to Italy and became increasingly concerned with depicting the power of light, using primary colours – especially yellow – often arranged in a swirling vortex. In the 1830s and 1840s he adopted watercolour techniques for his 'colour beginnings' in oil, which he later worked up to finished paintings, notably in Norham Castle (*c.*1845). He is perhaps best known for Rain, Steam, Speed (1844) and for the seascape The Fighting Téméraire (1838).

Tyndale /'tɪnd(ə)l/, William (*c.*1494–1536), English translator and Protestant martyr. Faced with ecclesiastical opposition to his project for translating the Bible into English, Tyndale went abroad in 1524, never to return to his own country; his translation of the New Testament (*c.*1525–6) was published in Germany. He then translated the Pentateuch (1530) and Jonah (1531), both of which were printed in Antwerp. Tyndale's translations later formed the basis of the Authorized Version. In 1535 he was arrested in Antwerp on a charge of heresy, and subsequently strangled and burnt at the stake.

Tyndall /'tɪnd(ə)l/, John (1820–93), Irish physicist. He is best known for his work on heat, studying such aspects as the absorbance and transmission of heat by gases and liquids, the thermal conductivity of solids, and the use of discontinuous heating as a sterilization technique. Tyndall also worked on diamagnetism, glaciers, the transmission of sound, and the scattering of light by suspended particles, becoming the first person to explain the blue colour of the sky. He was a prolific and popular lecturer and writer.

typewriter /'taɪp,raɪtə(r)/ n. a machine with keys for producing printlike characters one at a time on paper inserted round a roller. An Englishman, Henry Mill, was granted a patent for a machine to impress or transcribe letters singly, but the first practical typewriter was produced in 1874 by the Remington Arms Company of America. It had forty-four keys arranged in the familiar 'qwerty' order, to regulate the typist's speed and prevent the bars which carried the letters from jamming — an arrangement still in use despite advances that make it unnecessary. The electric typewriter dates from 1935, and later improvements include placing the letters on a spinning 'golf ball' or 'daisy wheel', and using plastic ribbon in a cartridge instead of an inked ribbon on a spool. Typewriters have been superseded in many applications by the word processor, and modern forms usually have a limited electronic memory.

Tyre /'taɪə(r)/ a port on the Mediterranean in southern Lebanon; pop. (1988) 14,000. Founded in the 2nd millennium BC as a colony of Sidon, it was for centuries a Phoenician port and trading centre. Its prosperity did not decline until the 14th century.

tyre /'taɪə(r)/ n. (US tire) 1 a rubber covering, usu. inflated, placed round a wheel to form a soft contact with the road. (See note below.) 2 a strengthening band of metal fitted round the rim of a wheel, esp. of a railway vehicle. □ tyre-gauge a portable device for measuring the air-pressure in a tyre. [ME, perh. = archaic tire head-dress] ultrasonics /ˌʌltrə'sonɪks/ n.pl. (usu. treated as sing.) the science and application of ultrasonic waves (ultrasound). Sound of very high frequency (around 20,000 Hz and above) can be formed into a powerful beam, and ultrasound has a number of practical applications. It is used in sonar, detecting faults or cracks in metals, in cleaning processes, forming emulsions between immiscible liquids, disrupting bacterial and other cells, and as an alternative to X-rays in medical diagnosis. Cutting tools of relatively soft metals can be ultrasonically vibrated to cut shapes or holes in glassy or ceramic materials that cannot be machined by conventional techniques.

▪ In the mid-19th century tyres for carriage wheels began to be made of solid rubber instead of metal, although this still gave a hard ride. The first pneumatic tyres were invented in 1845 by the Scottish engineer R. W. Thomson, but the idea lapsed until 1888 when J. B. Dunlop devised the first practical one for use on his son's tricycle. He used an air-filled tube inside a canvas cover with rubber treads, and the Michelin Tyre Company pioneered its use on motor vehicles in the 1890s. Modern car tyres have dispensed with the inner tube, though most bicycle tyres still use one. The old cross-ply tyre with its transversely arranged fabric cords has given way to the radial, which has the cords arranged radially and is usually reinforced with steel wires.

ultrasound /'ʌltrəˌsaʊnd/ n. 1 sound having an ultrasonic frequency. 2 ultrasonic waves. □ ultrasound cardiography = ECHOCARDIOGRAPHY.

ultrastructure /'ʌltrəˌstrʌktʃə(r)/ n. Biol. fine structure not visible with an optical microscope.

ultraviolet /ˌʌltrə'vaɪələt/ adj. & n. (abbr. UV) ● adj. 1 (of electromagnetic radiation) having a wavelength less than that of the violet end of the visible light spectrum but greater than that of X-rays. (See note below.) 2 of or using such radiation. ● n. the ultraviolet part of the spectrum.

- Ultraviolet radiation spans wavelengths from about 10 nm to 400 nm, the longer wavelengths being visible to bees and some other insects. It is an important component of sunlight, although the ozone layer prevents much of it from reaching the earth's surface. While ultraviolet in sunlight is necessary for the production of vitamin D_2 in the skin, it is now known that excessive exposure to it can be harmful, causing skin cancer and genetic mutation. Uses of ultraviolet include sterilization, spectroscopy, and sunlamps; fluorescent substances such as optical whiteners reflect ultraviolet light at longer (and therefore visible) wavelengths. Ultraviolet radiation is divided, in order of decreasing wavelength, into UVA, UVB, and UVC, of which the last does not penetrate the ozone layer. (See also OZONE LAYER.)

un-^{1} /ʌn/ prefix 1 added to adjectives and participles and their derivative nouns and adverbs, meaning: a not: denoting the absence of a quality or state (unusable; uncalled-for; uneducated; unfailing; unofficially; unhappiness). b the reverse of, usu. with an implication of approval or disapproval, or with some other special connotation (unselfish; unsociable; unscientific). ¶ Words formed in this way often have neutral counterparts in non- (see NON- 6) and counterparts in in- (see IN-^{1}), e.g. unadvisable. 2 (less often) added to nouns, meaning 'a lack of' (unrest; untruth). ¶ The number of words that can be formed with this prefix (and similarly with un-^{2}) is potentially as large as the number of adjectives in use; consequently only a selection, being considered the most current or semantically noteworthy, can be given here. [OE f. Gmc, rel. to L in-] un-^{2} /ʌn/ prefix added to verbs and (less often) nouns, forming verbs denoting: 1 the reversal or cancellation of an action or state (undress; unlock; unsettle). 2 deprivation or separation (unmask). 3 release from (unburden; uncage). 4 causing to be no longer (unman). ¶ See the note at un-^{1}. Both un-^{1} and un-^{2} can be understood in some forms in -able, -ed (especially), and -ing: for example, undressed can mean either 'not dressed' or 'no longer dressed'. [OE un-, on- f. Gmc] un-^{3} /ʌn/ prefix Chem. denoting 'one', combined with other numerical roots nil (=0), un (=1), bi (=2), etc., to form names of newly discovered elements. The roots are put together in order of the digits which make up the atomic number, and are terminated by -ium (unnilquadium = 104, ununbium = 112, etc.). The system was devised by IUPAC, to be used pending agreement on a permanent name. [L unus one]

Union, Act of (in British history) either of the parliamentary acts by which the countries of the United Kingdom were brought together as a political whole. By the first Act of Union (1707) Scotland was joined with England to form Great Britain, with Scotland losing its Parliament (the crowns of the two countries had been united in 1603). The second Act of Union, in 1801, established the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and abolished the free Protestant Parliament of Ireland. Wales had been incorporated with England, and given parliamentary representation, in 1536.

Union Jack 1 (also Union flag) the national flag or ensign of the United Kingdom (formerly of Great Britain). (See note below.) 2 (union jack) US a jack consisting of the union from the national flag.

- This flag (originally and more properly the Union flag) was formed by combining the crosses of the three patron saints St George, St Andrew, and St Patrick, retaining the blue ground of the banner of St Andrew. The flags of St George and St Andrew were first combined to symbolize the union of the crowns of England and Scotland (1603), the cross of St Patrick being added on the union of the Parliaments of Great Britain and Ireland (1801). Originally the term Union Jack denoted a small British Union flag flown as the jack of a ship, in later and more extended use coming to denote any size or adaptation of the Union flag.

United Arab Republic (abbr. UAR) a former political union established by Egypt and Syria in 1958. It was seen as the first step towards the creation of a pan-Arab union in the Middle East, but only Yemen (1958–66) entered into loose association with it and Syria withdrew following a coup in 1961. Egypt retained the name United Arab Republic until 1971.

United Artists a US film production company founded in 1919 by actors Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks, and Mary Pickford and director D. W. Griffith. Formed to make films without the artistic strictures of the larger companies, United Artists owned no studios or cinemas. After silent films like Chaplin's The Gold Rush (1925) the company went on to produce many literary adaptations in the 1930s and 1940s; in the 1960s it produced The Magnificent Seven (1960), West Side Story (1961), and the James Bond series.

United Kingdom (abbr. UK) (in full United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland) a country of western Europe consisting of England, Wales, Scotland, and Northern Ireland; pop. (1991), 55,700,000; official language, English; capital, London. England (which had incorporated Wales in the 16th century) and Scotland have had the same monarch since 1603, when James VI of Scotland succeeded to the English crown as James I; the kingdoms were formally united by the Act of Union in 1707. An Act of Parliament joined Great Britain and Ireland in 1801, but the Irish Free State (later the Republic of Ireland) withdrew in 1921. Constitutional monarchy in Great Britain was established by the Glorious Revolution of 1688, with parliamentary supremacy guaranteed by the passing of the Bill of Rights (1689). Although the American colonies broke away in 1783, in the 18th century Great Britain became the leading naval and colonial power in the world, while the Industrial Revolution which was then beginning made it the first industrialized country. The United Kingdom fought on the victorious side through both world wars. In the 20th century it gradually lost its status as a world power, although the monarch remains titular head of the Commonwealth, an association of the former states of the British Empire. The UK became a member of the EEC in 1973. (See also BRITAIN, GREAT BRITAIN.)

United Nations (abbr. UN) an international organization of countries set up in 1945, in succession to the League of Nations, to promote international peace, security, and cooperation. Its headquarters are in New York. Its members, originally the countries that fought against the Axis Powers in the Second World War, now number more than 150 and include most sovereign states of the world, the chief exceptions being Switzerland and North and South Korea. Administration is by a secretariat headed by the Secretary-General. The chief deliberative body is the General Assembly, in which each member state has one vote; recommendations are passed but are not binding on members, and in general have had little effect on world politics. At first the US and its allies were usually able to command a majority in the General Assembly, but more recently the process of decolonization has led to a shift of balance in favour of the developing countries. The Security Council bears the primary responsibility for the maintenance of peace and security, and may call on members to take military or economic action to enforce its decisions; other bodies carry out the functions of the UN with regard to international economic, social, judicial, cultural, educational, health, and other matters. Forces under UN auspices engage chiefly in peacekeeping activities, as in Angola, Somalia, and the former Yugoslavia, although a US-dominated coalition forcibly expelled Iraq from Kuwait in the Gulf War of 1991. (See also SECURITY COUNCIL.)

United Presbyterian Church a Presbyterian Church in Scotland formed in 1847. In 1900 it joined with the Free Church of Scotland to form the United Free Church.

United Provinces hist. 1 the seven Dutch provinces of Friesland, Gelderland, Groningen, Holland, Overijssel, Utrecht, and Zeeland, which formed a union under the Treaty of Utrecht in 1579 following their successful rebellion against Spanish rule, leading to the formation of the Dutch Republic. 2 a former administrative division of British India, formed in 1902 by the union of Agra and Oudh. In 1950 it became the state of Uttar Pradesh.

United Provinces of Central America a former federal republic in Central America, formed in 1823 to unite the states of Guatemala, El Salvador, Honduras, Nicaragua, and Costa Rica, all newly independent from Spain. The federation collapsed in 1838.

United Reformed Church (abbr. URC) a Church formed in 1972 by the union of the greater part of the Congregational Church in England and Wales with the Presbyterian Church in England.

United States (abbr. US) (in full United States of America, abbr. USA) a country occupying most of the southern half of North America and including also Alaska and the Hawaiian Islands; pop. (1990) 248,709,870; official language, English; capital, Washington, DC. The US is a federal republic comprising fifty states and the Federal District of Columbia. It originated in the successful rebellion of the British colonies on the east coast in 1775–83 (see AMERICAN INDEPENDENCE, WAR OF). The original thirteen states which formed the Union (see UNION, THE 1a) drew up a federal constitution in 1787, and George Washington was elected the first President in 1789. In the 19th century the territory of the US was extended across the continent through the westward spread of pioneers and settlers (at the expense of the American Indian peoples), by the purchase of the Louisiana territory from France (1803) and Florida from Spain (1819), and by the acquisition of Texas, California, and other territory from Mexico in the 1840s. The American Civil War (1861–5), between the northern states and the southern Confederacy, which wished to secede over the issues of slavery and states' rights, ended in defeat for the South and the abolition of slavery in the US. Throughout the 19th and early 20th century immigration continued, mainly from Europe, greatly increasing the population and increasing the country's cultural diversity. Arizona became the 48th state of the Union in 1912, completing the organization of the coterminous territory; Alaska, purchased from Russia in 1867, and Hawaii, annexed in 1898, achieved statehood in 1959. After a long period of isolation in foreign affairs, the US participated on the Allied side in both world wars and dominated the non-Communist world throughout the cold war as one of the two rival superpowers. In the latter part of the 20th century the United States became the world's leading military and economic power.

▪ Ancient and medieval philosophers followed the Ptolemaic system, which placed the earth at the centre of the universe with the celestial bodies orbiting it on idealized crystal spheres. It later gave way to the Copernican system, placing the sun at the centre. This was in turn displaced by the realization (due to William Herschel) that the Milky Way was a great host of stars, of which our sun was but one. Only in the 20th century was it conclusively shown that there are billions of other star systems or galaxies, many bigger than our own, and the universe is now believed to be at least 10,000 million light-years in diameter. (See COSMOLOGY.)

Ur /ɜː(r)/ an ancient Sumerian city formerly on the Euphrates, in southern Iraq. It was one of the oldest cities of Mesopotamia, dating from the 4th millennium BC, and reached its zenith in the 3rd millennium BC. It was ruled by Sargon I in the 24th century BC and according to the Bible was Abraham's place of origin. Much of the city was sacked and destroyed by the Elamites *c.*2000 BC, but it recovered and underwent a revival under Nebuchadnezzar. Ur was conquered by Cyrus the Great in the 6th century BC, after which it fell into decline and was finally abandoned in the 4th century BC. The site was excavated in 1922–34 by Sir Leonard Woolley, who discovered spectacular royal tombs and vast ziggurats dating from the period *c.*2600–2000 BC.

Ural Mountains /ˈjʊərəl/ (also Urals) a mountain range in northern Russia, extending 1,600 km (1,000 miles) southwards from the Arctic Ocean to the Aral Sea, in Kazakhstan, rising to 1,894 m (6,214 ft) at Mount Narodnaya. It forms the boundary between Europe and Asia.

Urania /jʊ'reɪnɪə/ Gk & Rom. Mythol. the Muse of astronomy. [Gk, = heavenly] uraninite /jʊ'rænɪˌnaɪt/ n. a black, brown, or grey mineral consisting mainly of uranium dioxide, esp. in the form of pitchblende. It is the major ore of uranium.

uranium /jʊ'reɪnɪəm/ n. a grey dense radioactive metallic chemical element (atomic number 92; symbol U). Uranium was discovered by Klaproth in 1789 and first isolated in 1841. It occurs in pitchblende, uraninite, and other minerals, and is a chemically reactive metal belonging to the actinide series. Becquerel discovered radioactivity in uranium in 1896, and its capacity to undergo fission, first revealed in 1938, led to its use as a source of energy, though the fissile isotope, uranium-235, has to be separated from the more common uranium-238 by a laborious process before it can be used. The atom bomb exploded over Hiroshima in 1945 contained uranium-235. This isotope has since been used to produce power in nuclear reactors, as has uranium-238 which, though not fissile, can be transmuted into the fissile element plutonium. Uranium compounds have been used as colouring agents for ceramics and glass. □ uranic /-'rænɪk/ adj. uranous /'jʊərənəs/ adj. [f. URANUS]

urano-^{1} /'jʊərənəʊ/ comb. form the heavens. [Gk ouranos heaven(s)]

uranography /ˌjʊərə'nɒgrəfɪ/ n. the branch of astronomy concerned with describing and mapping the stars etc. □ uranographer n. uranographic /-nə'græfɪk/ adj.

Uranus /'jʊərənəs, jʊ'reɪn-/ 1 Gk Mythol. a personification of heaven or the sky, the most ancient of the Greek gods and first ruler of the universe. He was overthrown and castrated by his son Cronus. 2 Astron. the seventh planet from the sun in the solar system, orbiting between Jupiter and Neptune at an average distance of 2,870 million km from the sun. (See note below.) [L f. Gk Ouranos heaven]

- Uranus was the first planet to be discovered by telescope, by William Herschel in 1781. It is the third largest planet (but fourth in mass), with an equatorial diameter of 50,800 km, and one of the gas giants. The planet is bluish-green in colour, having an upper atmosphere consisting almost entirely of hydrogen and helium, and appears featureless. It is unusual in that its axis lies almost in the plane of the solar system. There are at least seventeen satellites, the largest of which are Oberon and Titania, and a faint ring system.

urban /'ɜːb(ə)n/ adj. of, living in, or situated in a town or city (an urban population) (opp. RURAL 1). □ urban district Brit. hist. a group of urban communities governed by an elected council. urban guerrilla a terrorist operating in an urban area. urban renewal slum clearance and redevelopment in a city or town. urban sprawl the uncontrolled expansion of urban areas. urea /'jʊərɪə, jʊ'riːə/ n. Biochem. a soluble colourless crystalline nitrogenous compound contained esp. in the urine of mammals. □ ureal /jʊ'riːəl/ adj. [mod.L f. F urée f. Gk ouron urine] uremia US var. of URAEMIA.

ureter /jʊ'riːtə(r)/ n. Anat. & Zool. the duct by which urine passes from the kidney to the bladder or cloaca. □ ureteral adj. ureteric /ˌjʊərɪ'terɪk/ adj. ureteritis /jʊˌriːtə'raɪtɪs/ n. [F uretère or mod.L ureter f. Gk ourētēr f. oureō urinate] urethane /jʊ'riːθeɪn, 'jʊərɪˌθeɪn/ n. Chem. a crystalline amide, ethyl carbamate, used in plastics and paints. [F uréthane (as UREA, ETHANE)] urethra /jʊ'riːθrə/ n. (pl. urethrae /-riː/ or urethras) Anat. the duct by which urine is discharged from the bladder. □ urethral adj. urethritis /ˌjʊərɪ'θraɪtɪs/ n. [LL f. Gk ourēthra (as URETER)]

Urey /'jʊərɪ/, Harold Clayton (1893–1981), American chemist. He searched for a heavy isotope of hydrogen, discovering deuterium in 1932, and developing a technique for obtaining heavy water. Because of his work on isotope separation he was made director of the atom bomb project at Columbia University during the Second World War. Urey pioneered the use of isotope labelling; he also developed theories on the formation of the planets and of the possible synthesis of organic compounds in earth's primitive atmosphere. He was awarded the Nobel Prize for chemistry in 1934.

utilitarian /juːˌtɪlɪˈteərɪən/ adj. & n. ● adj. 1 designed to be useful for a purpose rather than attractive; severely practical. 2 of utilitarianism. ● n. an adherent of utilitarianism.

utilitarianism /juːˌtɪlɪˈteərɪəˌnɪz(ə)m/ n. Philos. the theory that an action is right in so far as it promotes happiness, and that the guiding principle of conduct should be to achieve the greatest happiness or benefit of the greatest number. Utilitarianism was advanced most famously by Jeremy Bentham and J. S. Mill (although an important antecedent was David Hume), and has developed to become one of the most influential of philosophical theories. Its concern with the consequences of an action, rather than with the action's intrinsic nature or with the motives of the agent, has aroused opposition; other problems facing the theory include the difficulty of comparing quantitatively the happiness of one person with that of another, and of accounting for the value placed on concepts such as justice and equality.

van de Velde^1 /ˌvæn də 'velt, 'veldə/, a family of Dutch painters. Willem (known as Willem van de Velde the Elder) (1611–93) painted marine subjects and was for a time official artist to the Dutch fleet. He also worked for Charles II. His sons were Willem (known as Willem van de Velde the Younger) (1633–1707) and Adriaen (1636–72). Like his father, Willem the Younger was a notable marine artist who painted for Charles II, while Adriaen's works included landscapes, portraits, and biblical and genre scenes.

van de Velde^2 /ˌvæn də 'velt, 'veldə/, Henri (Clemens) (1863–1957), Belgian architect, designer, and teacher. He was influenced by the Arts and Crafts Movement and pioneered the development of art nouveau design and architecture in Europe. In 1906 he became head of the Weimar School of Arts and Crafts (which developed into the Bauhaus), Walter Gropius being among his pupils. Van de Velde's buildings include the Werkbund Theatre in Cologne (1914) and his own house near Brussels (1895). He also designed furniture, ceramics, and graphics.

Van Diemen's Land /væn 'di:mənz/ the former name (until 1855) for TASMANIA.

Van Dyck /væn 'daɪk/, Sir Anthony (also Vandyke) (1599–1641), Flemish painter. Having worked as an assistant in Rubens's workshop in Antwerp (1618–20), he visited Italy, where he based himself in Genoa and studied Titian and other Venetian painters. While in Genoa he painted a number of portraits which marked the onset of his artistic maturity. Thereafter he received commissions from several royal clients, including Charles I, who invited Van Dyck to England and knighted him in 1632. His subsequent portraits of members of the English court, noted for their refinement of style and elegant composition, determined the course of portraiture in England for more than 200 years.

Van Eyck /væn 'aɪk/, Jan (*c.*1370–1441), Flemish painter. He is said by Vasari to have invented oil-painting, and though it is known that oils were used before his time there is no doubt that he made an innovative contribution to the technique of their use, bringing greater flexibility, richer and denser colour, and a wider range from light to dark. His best-known works include the altarpiece The Adoration of the Lamb (known as the Ghent Altarpiece, 1432) in the church of St Bavon in Ghent and the portrait The Arnolfini Marriage (1434).

Van Gogh /væn 'gox, 'gɒf, 'gəʊ/, Vincent (Willem) (1853–90), Dutch painter. Although he is most closely identified with post-impressionism, his early paintings, such as The Potato Eaters (1885), were often of peasants and are characterized by the use of dark colours. A move to Paris in 1886 brought him into contact with the works of the impressionists and with Japanese woodcuts, instigating a change in his technique. He began to use brighter colours and adopted broad, vigorous, swirling brushstrokes. In 1888 he settled at Arles, where he was briefly joined by Gauguin, but they quarrelled, and Van Gogh, suffering from depression, cut off part of his own ear. After a year spent in an asylum he entered into a period of intense creative activity but continued to suffer from severe depression, and eventually committed suicide. Among his best-known works are several studies of sunflowers and A Starry Night (1889).

Varèse /væ'rez/, Edgar(d) (1883–1965), French-born American composer. Varèse emigrated to the US in 1915, and most of his works from before this date have been lost. His compositions were predominantly orchestral in nature until the 1950s, when he began to experiment with tape-recordings and electronic instruments (see MUSIQUE CONCRÈTE). His works are known for their use of dissonance and for their experimentation with unusual sounds and instrument combinations; they include Ionisation (1931), for percussion, piano, and two sirens, and Poème électronique (1958).

Vargas /'vo:gəs/, Getúlio Dornelles (1883–1954), Brazilian statesman, President 1930–45 and 1951–4. Although defeated in the presidential elections of 1930, Vargas seized power in the ensuing revolution, overthrowing the republic and ruling as a virtual dictator for the next fifteen years. He furthered Brazil's modernization by the introduction of fiscal, educational, electoral, and land reforms, but his regime was totalitarian and repressive. He was overthrown in a coup in 1945. He was returned to power after elections in 1951, but his government was unpopular and he committed suicide after widespread calls for his resignation.

Vargas Llosa /ˌvɑːgəs 'jəʊsə/, (Jorge) Mario (Pedro) (b.1936), Peruvian novelist, dramatist, and essayist. His fiction often contains elements of myth and fantasy and has been associated with magic realism; it is frequently critical of the political situation in Peru. Novels include The Time of the Hero (1963), satirizing Peruvian society via the microcosm of a corrupt military academy, Aunt Julia and the Scriptwriter (1977), and The War of the End of the World (1982). He returned to Peru in 1974, after living abroad for many years, and stood unsuccessfully for the presidency in 1990.

Vasarely /ˌvæsə'relɪ/, Viktor (1908–97), Hungarian-born French painter. He settled in Paris in 1930 after studying art in Budapest. A pioneer of op art, he began experimenting with the use of optical illusion during the 1930s, although the style of geometric abstraction for which he is best known dates from the late 1940s. His paintings are characterized by their repeated geometric forms and interacting vibrant colours which create a visually disorientating effect of movement.

Vasari /və'sɑ:rɪ/, Giorgio (1511–74), Italian painter, architect, and biographer. He wrote Lives of the Most Excellent Painters, Sculptors and Architects (1550, enlarged 1568), a work which laid the basis for later study of art history in the West; the book traces the development of Renaissance painting from the work of painters such as Giotto to that of Leonardo da Vinci, Raphael, and particularly Michelangelo, whose work he regarded as the pinnacle of achievement. His own work was mannerist in style and includes the vast frescos depicting the history of Florence and the Medici family in the Palazzo Vecchio in Florence, as well as the design of the Uffizi palace.

Vatican City an independent papal state in the city of Rome, the seat of government of the Roman Catholic Church; pop. (est. 1991) 1,000. It covers an area of 44 hectares (109 acres) around St Peter's Basilica and the palace of the Vatican, and is extended to some outlying buildings such as the pope's summer residence, Castel Gandolfo. After the incorporation of the former Papal States into a unified Italy in 1870, the temporal power of the pope was suspended until the Lateran Treaty of 1929, signed by Pope Pius XI and Mussolini. This recognized the full and independent sovereignty of the Holy See in the Vatican City.

Vatican Council either of two ecumenical councils of the Roman Catholic Church which met in the Vatican. The first, held in 1869–70, proclaimed the infallibility of the pope when speaking ex cathedra; the second, which took place in 1962–5, sought to bring about liturgical and organizational reforms and to promote unity between different Christian Churches.

Vedic religion n. the ancient religion of the Aryan peoples who entered NW India *c.*2000–1200 BC from Persia (Iran), the precursor of Hinduism; the religious beliefs and practices contained in the Veda. It was a religion of ritual sacrifice to many gods, especially Indra, Varuna, and Agni; animal, vegetable, and possibly human sacrifice are described. Vedic society was divided into distinct classes (varnas) that formed the basis of the caste system and are still in evidence in Hinduism today. The increasing complexity of Vedic ritual led to dominance by a specialist priesthood, the composition of the Brahmanas, and the rigidity of orthodox Brahmanism (*c.*900 BC onwards). The transition to classical Hinduism began in about the 5th century BC.

Venezuela /ˌvenɪ'zweɪlə/ a republic on the north coast of South America, with a coastline on the Caribbean Sea; pop. (est. 1991) 20,191,000; official language, Spanish; capital, Caracas. Columbus discovered the mouth of the Orinoco river in 1498, and in the following year Vespucci explored the coast. The early Spanish explorers gave the country its name (= little Venice), when they saw native houses built on stilts over water. Colonized by the Spanish in the 16th century, Venezuela won its independence in 1821 after a ten-year struggle, but did not finally emerge as a separate nation until its secession from federation with Colombia (1830). It is a major oil-exporting country, with the industry based on the area around Lake Maracaibo in the north-west. □ Venezuelan adj. & n.

Venice /'venɪs/ (Italian Venezia /ve'nɛtsja/) a city in NE Italy, capital of Venetia region; pop. (1990) 317,840. Situated on a lagoon of the Adriatic, it is built on numerous islands that are separated by canals and linked by bridges. It was a powerful republic in the Middle Ages and from the 13th to the 16th centuries a leading sea-power, controlling trade to the Levant and ruling parts of the eastern Mediterranean. Its commercial importance declined after the Cape route to India was discovered at the end of the 16th century, but it remained an important centre of art and music. After the Napoleonic Wars Venice was placed under Austrian rule and was incorporated into a unified Italy in 1866.

Vening Meinesz /ˌvenɪŋ 'maɪneʃ/, Felix Andries (1887–1966), Dutch geophysicist. He devised a technique for making accurate gravity measurements with the aid of a pendulum, using it first for a gravity survey of the Netherlands. He then pioneered the use of submarines for marine gravity surveys, locating negative gravity anomalies in the deep trenches near island arcs in the Pacific and interpreting them as being due to the downward buckling of the oceanic crust. This was eventually confirmed; Vening Meinesz, however, never supported the idea of continental drift.

- The planet Venus is almost equal in size to the earth, with a diameter of 12,104 km. It is the brightest celestial object after the sun and moon, frequently appearing in the twilight sky as the evening or morning star (Hesperus and Lucifer to the ancient Greeks and Romans), and it shows phases similar to the moon. The planet's disc is completely covered by clouds consisting chiefly of sulphuric acid droplets, and no surface detail can be seen by telescope. There is a dense atmosphere of carbon dioxide, which traps the heat of the sun by the greenhouse effect to produce a surface temperature of 460°C. Space probes have shown the surface to be a vast rocky plain with two raised 'continental' plateaux and a very high mountain massif, baking under a dull orange sky. The planet has no natural satellite.

Verdi /ˈveədɪ/, Giuseppe (Fortunino Francesco) (1813–1901), Italian composer. He is chiefly remembered for his many operas, which are notable for strong characterization, original orchestration, and memorable tunes. Verdi was a supporter of the movement for Italian unity, and several of his early works were identified with the nationalist cause, including Nabucco (1842), with which he established his reputation. Other operas include Rigoletto (1851), La Traviata (1853), and Otello (1887); Aida, commissioned to be staged in Cairo to celebrate the opening of the Suez Canal, was delayed due to the Franco-Prussian War and eventually first performed there in 1871. Among his other compositions are sacred choral works such as the Requiem Mass of 1874.

Vermeer /vɜːˈmɪə(r)/, Jan (1632–75), Dutch painter. He spent his life in his native town of Delft, where he generally painted domestic genre scenes, often depicting a single figure engaged in an ordinary task (e.g. The Kitchen-Maid, *c.*1658). His work is distinguished by its clear design and simple form, and by its harmonious balance of predominant yellows, blues, and greys. His other works include two views of Delft and a self-portrait, the Allegory of Painting (*c.*1665). His paintings were long neglected and only began to receive full recognition in the later 19th century.

Versailles /veə'saɪ/ a palace built for Louis XIV near the town of Versailles, south-west of Paris. The palace was built around a château belonging to Louis XIII, which was transformed by the addition of wings and other edifices in the grand French classical style. Much splendid interior work was carried out by Charles Lebrun and André-Charles Boulle (1642–1732), while the elaborate gardens, full of fountains and statuary, were laid out by André Le Nôtre. Later extensions, such as the Trianon palaces in the grounds, were added during the reigns of Louis XIV and Louis XV. The palace's active life terminated when Louis XVI was forced out by the Paris revolutionaries in October 1789, but Versailles was restored and turned into a museum by King Louis Philippe.

Versailles, Treaty of 1 a treaty which terminated the War of American Independence in 1783. 2 a treaty signed in 1919 which, along with a series of associated agreements, brought a formal end to the First World War, redivided the territory of the defeated Central Powers, restricted Germany's armed forces, and established the League of Nations. The treaty in fact represented an unhappy compromise between conciliation and punishment, leaving Germany smarting under what it considered a vindictive settlement while not sufficiently restricting its ability eventually to rearm and seek forcible redress.

Vesalius /vɪ'seɪlɪəs/, Andreas (1514–64), Flemish anatomist, the founder of modern anatomy. He challenged traditional theories of anatomy, holding them to be seriously flawed in being based on the bodies of apes — a view borne out by later studies. His major work, De Humani Corporis Fabrica (1543), contained accurate descriptions of human anatomy; it owed much of its great historical impact, however, to the woodcuts of his dissections, which were drawn and engraved by others. He became unofficial physician to the Emperor Charles V, followed by a period with Philip II of Spain. The medical profession there still supported Galen, whose works he had strongly criticized, and Vesalius died while returning to his old post at Padua.

Vespucci /ve'spuːtʃɪ/, Amerigo (1451–1512), Italian merchant and explorer. He is said to have made a number of voyages to the New World, although only two have been authenticated. His first such voyage, for the Spanish, was probably made between 1499 and 1500 and saw the explorer reach the coast of Venezuela. Having entered Portuguese service, he embarked on another voyage (1501–2), during which he explored the Brazilian coastline and sailed at least as far south as the River Plate. The Latin form of his first name is believed to have given rise to the name of America.

Vico /'vi:kəʊ/, Giambattista (1668–1744), Italian philosopher. His work championed the philosophy of history rather than the mathematical and scientific philosophy favoured by his contemporaries. In Scienza Nuova (1725) he proposed that civilizations are subject to recurring cycles of barbarism, heroism, and reason. Vico argued that these cycles are accompanied by corresponding cultural, linguistic, and political modes. He claimed that in literature, for example, poetry flourishes in the heroic age, while prose enters in the age of reason. His historicist philosophy made an impression on later philosophers such as Marx and semioticians such as Umberto Eco.

Victor Emmanuel II /ˌvɪktər ɪ'mænjʊəl/ (1820–78), ruler of the kingdom of Sardinia 1849–61 and king of Italy 1861–78. His appointment of Cavour as Premier in 1852 hastened the drive towards Italian unification. In 1859 Victor Emmanuel led his Piedmontese army to victory against the Austrians at the battles of Magenta and Solferino, and in 1860 entered the papal territories around French-held Rome to join his forces with those of Garibaldi. After being crowned first king of a united Italy in Turin in 1861, Victor Emmanuel continued to add to his kingdom, acquiring Venetia in 1866 and Rome in 1870.

Victor Emmanuel III /ˌvɪktər ɪ'mænjʊəl/ (1869–1947), king of Italy 1900–46. He succeeded to the throne after his father's assassination. Under Mussolini, whom he had invited to form a government in 1922 in order to forestall civil war, Victor Emmanuel lost all political power. However, during the Second World War, after the loss of Sicily to the Allies (1943), he acted to dismiss Mussolini and conclude an armistice. Victor Emmanuel abdicated in favour of his son in 1946, but a republic was established the same year by popular vote and both he and his son went into exile.

Victoria^2 /vɪk'tɔ:rɪə/ (1819–1901), queen of Great Britain and Ireland 1837–1901 and empress of India 1876–1901. She succeeded to the throne on the death of her uncle, William IV, and married her cousin Prince Albert in 1840; they had nine children. As queen she took an active interest in the policies of her ministers, although she did not align the Crown with any one political party. She largely retired from public life and went into seclusion after Albert's death in 1861, but lived to achieve the longest reign in British history, a time during which Britain became a powerful and prosperous imperial nation. Her golden jubilee (1887) and diamond jubilee (1897) were marked with popular celebration.

Victoria^3 /vɪk'tɔ:rɪə/, Tomás Luis de (1548–1611), Spanish composer. In 1565 he went to Rome, where he may have studied with Palestrina; he eventually returned to Spain, settling in Madrid in 1594. His music, all of it religious, is characterized by its dramatic vigour and colour and resembles that of Palestrina in its contrapuntal nature; it includes motets, masses, and hymns.

(See note below.) 2 associated with attitudes attributed to this time, esp. of prudery and moral strictness. ● n. a person, esp. a writer, of this time. □ Victorianism n.

- The Victorian age was a time of increasing prosperity for the nation as a whole, of immense industrial and scientific development, and of the furthest extent of imperial expansion. In the arts, in reaction to the growth of industrialism and mass production, there was a vogue for Renaissance and medieval styles, as exemplified by the work of the Pre-Raphaelite painters and the Arts and Crafts Movement. Victorian style was in general lavish and highly ornate, particularly in architecture, where the prevailing forms were those of neoclassicism and of the Gothic revival. Architects such as Pugin advocated the Gothic style as the only one suitable for churches, but it was also used for civic buildings and even for small terraced houses.

- Video recorders operate in a similar way to audio tape recorders, except that the recording head rotates at high speed. The first video tape recorder was developed by the Ampex Corporation of America in about 1956, but the first machine for domestic use (by the Sony Corporation) was not introduced until 1969. Video tape recorders are used mainly in the broadcasting industry, which uses tape 2 inches (50 mm) wide. The video cassette recorder was pioneered by Peter Goldmark, and the first, using Sony's Betamax system, was put on the market in 1972. This has since given way to the popular VHS system, designed by the Matsushita Corporation. Most video cassette machines use half-inch (13 mm) tape, but in 1985 small cassettes were introduced with 0.3 inch (8 mm) tape suitable for use in camcorders.

As Vindobona, it was an important military centre under the Romans. From 1278 to 1918 it was the seat of the Habsburgs. It has long been a centre of the arts and especially music, Mozart, Beethoven, and the Strauss family being among the great composers who lived and worked there. It has many fine buildings, including St Stephen's cathedral, the Opera House, and the Hofburg (now the residence of the President of Austria). □ Viennese /vɪə'ni:z/ adj. & n.

Vienna, Congress of an international conference held 1814–15 to agree the settlement of Europe after the Napoleonic Wars. Attended by all the major European powers, it was dominated by Prussia, Russia, Britain, Austria, and France. The guiding principle of the settlement was the restoration and strengthening of hereditary and sometimes despotic rulers; the result was a political stability that lasted for three or four decades but often at the expense of liberal and nationalistic feeling.

Vietnam /vjet'næm/ a country in SE Asia, with a coastline on the South China Sea; pop. (est. 1991) 67,843,000; official language, Vietnamese; capital, Hanoi. Traditionally dominated by China, Vietnam came under increasing French influence and formed part of French Indo-China between 1862 and 1954. The country was occupied by the Japanese during the Second World War. After the war, hostilities between the French and the Communist Vietminh ended with French defeat and withdrawal. Vietnam was partitioned along the 17th parallel between Communist North Vietnam (capital, Hanoi) and non-Communist South Vietnam (capital, Saigon). A prolonged conflict between the North and the US-backed South ended in the victory of the North in 1975 (see VIETNAM WAR) and the reunification of the country under a Communist regime in the following year. Since then Vietnam has been involved in border disputes with China and military intervention to oust the Khmer Rouge regime in Cambodia, while its predominantly agricultural economy has been slowly recovering from wartime destruction and dislocation. [Vietnamese Viet name of the inhabitants, nam south]

Vietnamese /ˌvjetnə'mi:z/ adj. & n. ● adj. of or relating to Vietnam or its people or language. ● n. (pl. same) 1 a native or national of Vietnam. 2 the language of Vietnam, spoken by about 60 million people. Its origin is uncertain but it may be distantly related to Chinese, from which it derives about half its vocabulary.

Vietnam War a war between Communist North Vietnam and US-backed South Vietnam. Since the partition of Vietnam in 1954 the Communist North had attempted, largely through a guerrilla campaign in the South, to unite the country as a Communist state, fuelling US concern over the possible spread of Communism in SE Asia. After two US destroyers were reportedly fired on in the Gulf of Tonkin in 1964, President Johnson was given Congressional approval for military intervention. A US army (numbering 400,000, including many conscripts, by 1967) was sent to Vietnam, supported by contingents from South Korea, Australia, New Zealand, and Thailand, while American aircraft bombed North Vietnamese forces and (from 1969) areas of Cambodia. The Tet Offensive of 1968 damaged American confidence in its ability to win the war, which was arousing immense controversy and resentment at home, and US forces began to be withdrawn, finally leaving in 1973 during Richard Nixon's presidency; the North Vietnamese captured the southern capital Saigon to end the war in 1975. As well as causing millions of Vietnamese and Cambodian casualties (as against some 55,000 American dead) the war contributed to the destabilization of Cambodia and the rise of the Khmer Rouge movement.

Vignola /vɪˈnjəʊlə/, Giacomo Barozzi da (1507–73), Italian architect. His designs were mannerist in style and include a number of churches in Rome as well as private residences such as the Palazzo Farnese near Viterbo (1559–73). One of his most influential designs was that of the church of Il Gesù in Rome (begun 1568), the headquarters of the Jesuit order; based on Alberti's church of San Andrea, Mantua, it has a Latin cross plan, with the nave broadened and the dome area increased, in accordance with Counter-Reformation ideas and the new importance attached to preaching. He also wrote a significant treatise on the five orders of architecture.

Vigny /ˈviːnjɪ/, Alfred Victor, Comte de (1797–1863), French poet, novelist, and dramatist. From 1822 he published several volumes of verse which reveal his philosophy of stoic resignation; later poems, published posthumously in 1863, assert his faith in 'man's unconquerable mind'. Other works include his historical novel Cinq-Mars (1826) and the play Chatterton (1835), whose hero epitomizes the romantic notion of the poet as an isolated genius.

Viking^{1} /ˈvaɪkɪŋ/ n. & adj. ● n. any of the Scandinavian traders and pirates who ravaged much of northern Europe in the 8th–11th centuries AD. (See note below.) ● adj. of or relating to the Vikings or their time. [ON víkingr, perh. f. OE wīcing f. wīc camp]

- The Vikings set sail from Norway, Sweden, and Denmark in their characteristic longships, reaching as far west as Newfoundland, south to the Mediterranean, and eastwards to Russia and the Byzantine Empire, where they threatened Constantinople. In Europe they were able to strike far inland, sailing up the Rhine, Loire, and other rivers and often being bought off rather than fought by local rulers. While the early Viking expeditions were generally little more than raids in search of plunder, in later years they tended to end in conquest and colonization. Areas in which Vikings settled included Normandy, part of Ireland, and much of northern and eastern England (which they administered as the Danelaw): eventually a king of Denmark, Canute, succeeded to the English throne.

violin /ˌvaɪəˈlɪn/ n. 1 a musical instrument with four strings of treble pitch played with a bow. (See note below.) 2 a player of this instrument. □ violinist n. [It. violino dimin. of VIOLA^{1}]

▪ The violin family comprises the double bass, cello, viola, and the violin itself. All the instruments are bowed and have four strings, smooth unfretted necks (unlike the viol), and f-shaped sound-holes. They developed in Italy from the early 16th century. The violin is the treble of the family, with a compass of over three-and-a-half octaves allowing a wide range of expression. It became widely popular with the advent of baroque music, and soon replaced the viol, first in Italy and then in France and elsewhere. It is an indispensable member of the orchestra and the leading instrument in a great deal of chamber music, although its true solo repertoire is small; the violin is also an important folk instrument, and is occasionally used in jazz. Many of the instruments of the great Italian makers such as the Amati family and Antonio Stradivari are still in use today and are taken as models for new instruments.

virger var. of VERGER.

Virgil /ˈvɜːdʒɪl/ (also Vergil) (Latin name Publius Vergilius Maro) (70–19 BC), Roman poet. Virgil is one of the most important poets of the Augustan period. His first major work was the Eclogues, ten pastoral poems, modelled on those of Theocritus, in which the traditional themes of Greek bucolic poetry are blended with contemporary political and literary themes. His next work, the Georgics, is a didactic poem on farming, which also treats the wider themes of the relationship of human beings to nature and outlines an ideal of national revival after civil war. His last work was the Aeneid, an epic poem in twelve books (see AENEID). His works quickly established themselves as classics of Latin poetry and exerted great influence on later classical and post-classical literature.

(See note below.) 2 Computing = computer virus. 3 archaic a poison, a source of disease. 4 a harmful or corrupting influence. [L, = slimy liquid, poison]

- It was discovered in the 1890s that some diseases are caused by agents that are not retained by filters and are too small to be seen under a light microscope, but it was not until 1915–17 that the existence of viruses was confirmed. Examples of the viral diseases affecting humans are the common cold, influenza, measles, mumps, polio, rabies, and smallpox; many others affect animals, plants, and bacteria. Viruses utilize the host cell's own biochemical mechanisms to assemble replica viruses, which are then released into the host. Outside the cell they are metabolically inert – plant and insect viruses can even be crystallized – so they are not strictly organisms in the usual sense. The various cylindrical, polyhedral, and complex shapes that viruses exhibit under the electron microscope are used in their classification, as is the type of nucleic acid and the nature of the protein coat.

vitamin /ˈvɪtəmɪn, ˈvaɪt-/ n. any of a group of organic compounds, essential for normal growth and nutrition, which are required in small quantities in the diet because they cannot be synthesized by the body. (See note below.) [orig. vitamine f. L vita life + AMINE, because orig. thought to contain an amino acid]

- Several vitamins (the first of which were identified by Casimir Funk, who coined the term in 1912) are now recognized to be needed in the human diet: vitamin A (retinol) contributes to the pigments of the eye. Deficiency causes night-blindness and other symptoms. It can be obtained from various animal products, especially liver, and from vegetables such as carrots. vitamin B is a complex of substances, including vitamin B_1 (thiamine), vitamin B_2 (riboflavin), vitamin B_6 (pyridoxine), and vitamin B_{12} (cyanocobalamin), that are essential for the working of certain enzymes. They are found in a wide variety of animal and plant foods. vitamin C (ascorbic acid) serves to aid cells in adhering together and to maintain connective tissue. Deficiency results in scurvy. It is found mainly in fresh fruits and vegetables. vitamin D is a group of vitamins, including vitamin D_2 (calciferol) and vitamin D_3 (cholecalciferol), involved in the absorption and deposition in the bone of calcium and phosphorus. They are obtained especially from fish oils and liver, and cholecalciferol is produced in the skin in the presence of sunlight. Deficiency results in rickets in children and osteomalacia in adults. vitamin E (tocopherol) protects some types of molecule in the body from oxidation. It is found in a wide variety of foods. vitamin H is a name used especially in the US for biotin, otherwise regarded as part of the vitamin B complex, and involved in the metabolism of carbohydrates, fats, and proteins. vitamin K is a group of compounds, including vitamin K_1 (phylloquinone) and vitamin K_2 (menaquinone), essential for blood clotting. vitamin M is a name used especially in the US for folic acid, otherwise regarded as part of the vitamin B complex, and essential for red blood cell formation.

▪ Volcanoes occur where molten magma is formed as a result of stresses in the earth's crust, and is able to rise to the earth's surface to be erupted as lava. They are found mainly at the margins of the crustal plates such as the Mid-Atlantic Ridge and around the rim of the Pacific Ocean. Much of the driving force for eruptions comes from the release of dissolved gas and vapour from the magma as it rises. The kind of activity shown by a volcano depends on the chemistry of its magma. At one extreme, basic (silica-poor) lavas are fluid and are erupted smoothly and effusively, as in the Hawaiian volcanoes. Acidic (silica-rich) lavas are viscous, leading to violently explosive and destructive activity, as shown by the eruptions of Mount St Helens (1980) and Pinatubo (1991). Attempts to predict a volcano's eruptions so as to reduce hazards to people have focused on studying past eruptions and monitoring seismic activity and gas output. Spacecraft have discovered volcanoes on Mars, Venus, and Jupiter's satellite Io.

The lake serves for navigation, fishing, irrigation, and hydroelectric power.

Volta^{2} /ˈvɒltə/, Alessandro Giuseppe Antonio Anastasio, Count (1745–1827), Italian physicist. Volta was the inventor of a number of important electrical instruments, including the electrophorus and the condensing electroscope, but is best known for the voltaic pile or electrochemical battery (1800) — the first device to produce a continuous electric current. The impetus for this was Luigi Galvani's claim to have discovered a new kind of electricity produced in animal tissue, which Volta ascribed to normal electricity produced by the contact of two dissimilar metals.

Voltaire /vɒlˈteə(r)/ (pseudonym of François-Marie Arouet) (1694–1778), French writer, dramatist, and poet. He was a leading figure of the Enlightenment, and frequently came into conflict with the Establishment as a result of his radical political and religious views and satirical writings. He spent a period in exile in England (1726–9) and was introduced there to the theories of Isaac Newton and the empiricist philosophy of John Locke. He also became acquainted with British political institutions, and extolled them as against the royal autocracy of France. Voltaire lived in Switzerland from 1754, only returning to Paris just before his death. Major works include Lettres philosophiques (1734) and Candide (1758), a satirical tale attacking Leibniz's optimism; he also wrote plays, poetry, and historical works, and was a contributor to the Encyclopédie (see ENCYCLOPEDIA).

Wagner /'vo:gnə(r)/, (Wilhelm) Richard (1813–83), German composer. He developed an operatic genre which he called music drama, synthesizing music, drama, verse, legend, and spectacle. In the late 1840s and early 1850s, Wagner propounded his theories in a series of essays which polarized European musical opinion for decades. The Flying Dutchman (1841) was innovative in using scenes rather than numbers to form the structure. Wagner was forced into exile after supporting the German nationalist uprising in Dresden in 1848; in the same year he began writing the text of Der Ring des Nibelungen (The Ring of the Nibelungs), a cycle of four operas (Das Rheingold, Die Walküre, Siegfried, and Götterdämmerung) based loosely on ancient Germanic sagas. He wrote the accompanying music from 1854 to 1874, during which time he returned to Germany (1860). The Ring cycle is notable for its use of leitmotifs and orchestral colour to unify the music, dramatic narrative, and characterization. It was first staged in 1876 at Wagner's new Bayreuth theatre. Other works include the music drama Tristan and Isolde (1859) and the Siegfried Idyll (1870) for orchestra. □ Wagnerian /vo:g'nɪərɪən/ adj. & n.

Wales /weɪlz/ (called in Welsh Cymru) a principality of Great Britain and the United Kingdom, to the west of central England; pop. (1991) 2,798,200; capital, Cardiff. Wales is mainly mountainous and forms a large peninsula extending into the Irish Sea. The earliest inhabitants appear to have been overrun by Celtic peoples in the Bronze and Iron Ages. The Romans established forts and outposts in the north and south, linked by a system of roads. After the Roman withdrawal in the 5th century, the Celtic inhabitants of Wales successfully maintained independence against the Anglo-Saxons who settled in England, and in the 8th century Offa, king of Mercia, built an earthwork (see OFFA'S DYKE) marking the frontier. In the Dark Ages Christianity was spread through Wales by missionaries, but the country remained somewhat isolated and divided between rival rulers and chieftains. Norman colonization from England began in the 12th century, and their control over the country was assured by Edward I's conquest (1277–84). Edward began the custom of making the English sovereign's eldest son Prince of Wales. Wales was formally brought into the English legal and parliamentary system by Henry VIII (1536). Wales has retained a distinct cultural identity, and the Welsh language, spoken by about half a million people, is widely used. In 1997 a referendum approved the establishment of a Welsh assembly, inaugurated in 1999.

Wallace^1 /ˈwɒlɪs/, Alfred Russel (1823–1913), English naturalist and a founder of zoogeography. He independently formulated a theory of the origin of species that was very similar to that of Charles Darwin, to whom he communicated his conclusions. He travelled extensively in South America and the East Indies, collecting specimens and studying the geographical distribution of animals. In 1858 a summary of the joint views of Wallace and Darwin concerning natural selection was read to the Linnaean Society in London, but credit for the theory has been attached somewhat arbitrarily to Darwin.

Wallace^2 /'wolɪs/, (Richard Horatio) Edgar (1875–1932), English novelist, screenwriter, and dramatist. He is noted for his crime novels, including The Four Just Men (1905) and The Crimson Circle (1922). Based in Hollywood from 1931, he wrote the screenplay for the film King Kong, which was made shortly after his death.

Wallace^3 /'wolɪs/, Sir William (*c.*1270–1305), Scottish national hero. He was a leader of Scottish resistance to Edward I, defeating the English army at Stirling in 1297. In the same year he mounted military campaigns against the north of England and was appointed Guardian of the Realm of Scotland. After Edward's second invasion of Scotland in 1298, Wallace was defeated at the battle of Falkirk; he was subsequently captured and executed by the English.

Wallenberg /'vɑːlənˌbɜːg/, Raoul (1912–?), Swedish diplomat. While working as a businessman in Budapest in 1944, he was entrusted by the Swedish government with the protection of Hungarian Jews from the Nazis. Wallenberg helped many thousands of Jews (according to estimates, as many as 95,000) to escape death by issuing them with Swedish passports, but when Soviet forces took control of Budapest in 1945, he was arrested, taken to Moscow, and imprisoned. Although the Soviet authorities stated that Wallenberg had died in prison in 1947, his fate remains uncertain and there were claims that he was still alive in the 1970s.

Waller /'wolə(r)/, Fats (born Thomas Wright Waller) (1904–43), American jazz pianist, songwriter, band-leader, and singer. He composed the songs 'Ain't Misbehavin'' (1928) and 'Honeysuckle Rose' (1929), and was the foremost exponent of the New York 'stride school' of piano playing, which used tenths in the left hand to give a strong bass line. From 1934 onwards Waller achieved popular success as the leader of the group Fats Waller and His Rhythm.

Warhol /ˈwɔːhəʊl/ Andy (born Andrew Warhola) (*c.*1928–87), American painter, graphic artist, and film-maker. His work played a definitive role in New York pop art of the 1960s. Warhol's background in commercial art and advertising illustration was central to pop art's concern with the imagery of the mass media; his famous statement 'I like boring things' was expressed in the standardized, consciously banal, nature of his work. In the early 1960s he achieved fame for a series of silk-screen prints and acrylic paintings of familiar objects (such as Campbell's soup tins), car accidents, and Marilyn Monroe, treated with objectivity and precision. From 1965, Warhol increasingly devoted himself to film, playing an important part in the emergence of the new American underground cinema. He also managed the rock group Velvet Underground.

War of 1812 a conflict between the US and the UK 1812–14. The war was prompted by restrictions on US trade because of the British blockade of French and allied ports during the Napoleonic Wars, and by British and Canadian support for American Indians trying to resist westward expansion. The main area of operations was the Canadian border, which US forces tried repeatedly but unsuccessfully to breach. The Americans captured Detroit and won a series of engagements between single ships, while the British took Washington and burned public buildings (including the White House), but the war was eventually terminated by a treaty which restored all conquered territories to their owners before outbreak of war.

Washington^{1} /'woʃɪŋtən/ 1 a state of the north-western US, on the Pacific coast; pop. (1990) 4,866,690; capital, Olympia. It became the 42nd state in 1889. 2 (in full Washington, DC) the capital of the US; pop. (1990) 606,900. It is coextensive with the District of Columbia, a Federal district on the Potomac river with boundaries on the states of Virginia and Maryland. It was founded in 1790, during the presidency of George Washington, after whom it is named. Washington is one of the few capital cities that was planned and built as such: many of its most distinctive features, including the complex of parks and circular roads and the impressive siting of the Capitol, date from the earliest designs by the French engineer Pierre-Charles L'Enfant (1754–1825). 3 an industrial town in Tyne and Wear, NE England; pop. (1991) 56,848. It was designated as a new town in 1964. The original village of Washington was the ancestral home of George Washington, first President of the United States. □ Washingtonian /ˌwoʃɪŋ'təʊnɪən/ n. & adj.

Washington^{2} /'woʃɪŋtən/, Booker T(aliaferro) (1856–1915), American educationist. An emancipated slave, he pursued a career in teaching and was appointed head in 1881 of the newly founded Tuskegee Institute in Alabama for the training of black teachers. Washington emerged as a leading commentator for black Americans at the turn of the century and published his influential autobiography, Up from Slavery, in 1901. His emphasis on vocational skills and financial independence for blacks rather than on intellectual development or political rights, combined with his support for segregation, brought harsh criticism from other black leaders such as W. E. B. Du Bois, and from civil-rights activists of the 20th century.

Washington^{3} /'woʃɪŋtən/, George (1732–99), American soldier and statesman, 1st President of the US 1789–97. After serving as a soldier 1754–9 in the war against the French, Washington took part in the Continental Congresses of 1774 and 1775, and in 1775 was chosen as commander of the Continental Army. He served in that capacity throughout the War of Independence, bringing about the eventual American victory by keeping the army together through the bitter winter of 1777–8 at Valley Forge and winning a decisive battle at Yorktown (1781). Washington chaired the convention at Philadelphia (1787) that drew up the American Constitution and, two years later, he was unanimously elected President, initially remaining unaligned to any of the newly emerging political parties but later joining the Federalist Party. He served two terms, following a policy of neutrality in international affairs, before declining a third term and retiring to private life.

▪ Portable clocks first appeared in the early 16th century, but pocket or fob watches did not become practicable until the late 17th century with the advent of the coiled mainspring and the balance spring.

Most mechanical watches now use the lever escapement invented by Thomas Mudge (1717–94) in 1765. Wrist-watches first appeared in the 1880s and self-winding watches in the 1920s. The second half of the 20th century saw the introduction of both electric and electronic watches, which now achieve great accuracy from the vibrations of a quartz crystal. Electronics has enabled the use of digital readouts and a variety of timing functions. (See also CLOCK¹.)

- Water is one of the most abundant substances on earth, with oceans covering a large proportion of the planet's surface. It is also vital to life — which is believed to have first evolved in the sea — and almost all the metabolic processes of living organisms take place in watery solutions. Weather systems are powered by the evaporation of water by solar energy, and its condensation as liquid in clouds and, ultimately, rain, snow, etc. The importance of water is due to its physical and chemical properties, some of which are highly distinctive: it is able to dissolve many other substances; its solid form (ice) is less dense than the liquid form; its boiling-point is unusually high for its molecular weight; it has high viscosity and surface tension; and it is partially dissociated into hydrogen and hydroxyl ions. Heavy water contains the hydrogen isotope deuterium.

waterbird /'wɔːtəˌbɜːd/ n. a bird frequenting esp. fresh water.

Watford /'wotfəd/ a town in Hertfordshire, SE England: pop. (1991) 113,080.

watjin /wɑː'dʒɪn/ n. Austral. (in Aboriginal English) a white woman. [alt. of white gin: see GIN^{3}]

Watling Street /'wotlɪŋ/ a Roman road (now largely underlying modern roads) running north-westwards across England, from Richborough in Kent through London and St Albans to Wroxeter in Shropshire.

Watson^{1} /'wots(ə)n/, James Dewey (b.1928), American biologist. Together with Francis Crick he proposed a model for the structure of the DNA molecule (see CRICK), later recounting the discovery in The Double Helix (1968). He shared a Nobel Prize with Crick and Maurice Wilkins in 1962. He became director of the molecular biology laboratory at Cold Spring Harbor on Long Island in 1968, concentrating efforts on cancer research; he also served as director of the National Center for Human Genome Research (1989–92).

Watson^{2} /'wɒts(ə)n/, John Broadus (1878–1958), American psychologist, founder of the school of behaviourism. He viewed behaviour as determined by an interplay between genetic endowment and environmental influences, and held that the role of the psychologist was to discern, through observation and experimentation, which behaviour was innate and which was acquired. In seeking an objective study of psychology, he set the stage for the empirical study of animal and human behaviour which was to dominate 20th-century psychology, particularly in the US.

Watson, Dr /'wots(ə)n/ a doctor who is the companion and assistant of Sherlock Holmes in detective stories by Sir Arthur Conan Doyle.

Watson-Watt /ˌwots(ə)n'wot/, Sir Robert Alexander (1892–1973), Scottish physicist. He produced a system for locating thunderstorms by means of their radio emissions, and went on to lead a team that developed radar into a practical system for locating aircraft. This was improved and rapidly deployed in Britain for use in the Second World War, in which it was to play a vital role. (See RADAR.)

Watt /wɒt/, James (1736–1819), Scottish engineer. He greatly improved the efficiency of the Newcomen beam engine by condensing the spent steam in a separate chamber, allowing the cylinder to remain hot. The improved engines were adopted for a variety of purposes, especially after Watt entered into a business partnership with the engineer Matthew Boulton. Watt continued inventing until the end of his life, introducing rotatory engines, controlled by a centrifugal governor, and devising a chemical method of copying documents. He also introduced the term horsepower.

watt /wɒt/ n. the SI unit of power (symbol W), equal to one joule per second and corresponding to the power in an electric circuit where the potential difference is one volt and the current one ampere. □ watt-hour the energy used when one watt is applied for one hour. [Watt] wattage /'wɒtɪdʒ/ n. an amount of electrical power expressed in watts.

Watteau /'wɒtəʊ/, Jean Antoine (1684–1721), French painter, of Flemish descent. An initiator of the rococo style in painting, he is also known for his invention of the pastoral genre known as the fête galante. Watteau deliberately created an imaginary and rather theatrical world; the light-hearted imagery of his painting contrasted with the serious religious and classical subject-matter approved by the Royal Academy of Painting and Sculpture. His best-known painting is L'Embarquement pour l'île de Cythère (1717).

wattle^1 /'wɒt(ə)l/ n. & v. ● n. 1 a interlaced rods and split rods as a material for making fences, walls, etc. b (in sing. or pl.) rods and twigs for this use. 2 an Australian acacia with long pliant branches, with bark used in tanning and golden flowers used as the national emblem. 3 dial. a wicker hurdle. ● v.tr. 1 make of wattle. 2 enclose or fill up with wattles. □ wattle and daub a network of rods and twigs plastered with mud or clay as a building material. [OE watul, of unkn. orig.]

wattle^2 /'wɒt(ə)l/ n. 1 a loose fleshy appendage on the head or throat of a turkey or other birds. 2 = BARB n. 3. □ wattled adj. [16th c.: orig. unkn.]

wattlebird /'wɒt(ə)l,bɜːd/ n. 1 an Australian honeyeater of the genus Anthochaera or Melidectes, with a wattle hanging from each cheek. 2 a New Zealand bird of the family Callaeidae, with wattles hanging from the base of the bill, e.g. the saddleback.

wattmeter /'wɒt,miːtə(r)/ n. a meter for measuring the amount of electricity in watts.

Watts^1 /wɒts/, George Frederick (1817–1904), English painter and sculptor. His work reflects his view of art as a vehicle for moral purpose; this is most evident in his allegorical paintings such as Hope (1886). He is best known for his portraits of public figures, including Gladstone, Tennyson, and J. S. Mill. He married the actress Ellen Terry in 1864, but the marriage lasted less than a year and the couple were finally divorced in 1877.

Watts^2 /wɒts/, Isaac (1674–1748), English hymn-writer and poet. His songs for children, which included 'How Doth the Little Busy Bee' (1715), anticipated those of William Blake. Watts is also remembered for hymns such as 'O God, Our Help in Ages Past' (1719).

Watusi /wə'tuːsɪ/ n., adj., & v. (also Watutsi /-'tʊtsɪ/) ● n. (pl. same or Watusis) 1 = Tutsi n. 2 an energetic popular dance of the 1960s. ● adj. = Tutsi adj. ● v.intr. dance the Watusi. [Bantu, f. wa- pl. prefix + Tutsi]

Waugh /wɔː/, Evelyn (Arthur St John) (1903–66), English novelist. His first novel Decline and Fall, a satire on life in a boys' preparatory school, was published in 1928 and was immensely successful. Waugh's other early novels, all social satires, include Vile Bodies (1930), A Handful of Dust (1934), and Scoop (1938). His work was profoundly influenced by his conversion to Roman Catholicism in 1930. Brideshead Revisited (1945), a complex story of an aristocratic Roman Catholic family, was more sombre in tone. Later works include The Loved One (1948) and his trilogy (based on his wartime experiences) Men at Arms (1952), Officers and Gentlemen (1955), and Unconditional Surrender (1961).

waul /wɔːl/ v.intr. (also wawl) give a loud plaintive cry like a cat. [imit.]

wave /weɪv/ v. & n. ● v. 1 a intr. (often foll. by to) move a hand etc. to and fro in greeting or as a signal (waved to me across the street). b tr. move (a hand etc.) in this way. 2 a intr. show a sinuous or sweeping motion as of a flag, tree, or a cornfield in the wind; flutter, undulate. b tr. impart a waving motion to. 3 tr. brandish (a sword etc.) as an encouragement to followers etc. 4 tr. tell or direct (a person) by waving (waved them away; waved them to follow). 5 tr. express (a greeting etc.) by waving (waved goodbye to them). 6 tr. give an undulating form to (hair, drawn lines, etc.); make wavy. 7 intr. (of hair etc.) have such a form; be wavy. ● n. 1 a ridge of water between two depressions. 2 a long body of water curling into an arched form and breaking on the shore. 3 a thing compared to this, e.g. a body of persons in one of successive advancing groups. 4 a gesture of waving. 5 a the process of waving the hair. b an undulating form produced in the hair by waving. 6 a a temporary occurrence or increase of a condition, emotion, or influence (a wave of enthusiasm). b (in phrases heatwave, cold wave) a spell of abnormal heat or cold. 7 Physics a a periodic disturbance of the particles of a substance which may be propagated without net movement of the particles, as in the passage of undulating motion, heat, sound, etc. (See note below.) b a single curve in the course of this motion (see also travelling wave (see TRAVEL), standing wave). c a similar variation of an electromagnetic field in the propagation of light or other radiation through a medium or vacuum. 8 (in pl.; prec. by the) poet. the sea; water. □ make waves colloq. 1 cause trouble. 2 create a significant impression. wave aside dismiss as intrusive or irrelevant. wave down wave to (a vehicle or its driver) as a signal to stop. wave energy = wave power. wave equation a differential equation expressing the properties of motion in waves. wave-form Physics a curve showing the shape of a wave at a given time. wave-front Physics a surface containing points affected in the same way by a wave at a given time. wave function a function satisfying a wave equation and describing the properties of a wave. wave mechanics a method of analysis of the behaviour esp. of atomic phenomena with particles represented by wave equations; quantum mechanics. wave number Physics the number of waves in a unit distance. wave power power obtained by harnessing the energy of waves. (See note below.) wave theory hist. the theory that light is propagated through the ether by a wave-motion imparted to the ether by the molecular vibrations of the radiant body. wave train a group of waves of equal or similar wavelengths travelling in the same direction. □ waveless adj. wavelike adj. & adv. [OE wafian (v.) f. Gmc: (n.) also alt. of ME wawe, wage]

- Waves can be longitudinal, transverse, or torsional vibrations. In longitudinal waves (e.g. sound waves) the to-and-fro vibration is parallel to the direction of propagation; in transverse waves (e.g. water waves or light waves) the vibration is at right angles to the direction of propagation; in torsional waves a rotatory motion is propagated. Waves display characteristic properties of reflection, refraction, diffraction, and interference, under appropriate conditions. When two waves travelling in opposite directions meet, a standing wave can result, which vibrates up and down but is not propagated. Wave phenomena are of great importance throughout physics. In quantum theory particles such as photons and electrons are considered to have a dual nature, sharing characteristics of both waves and particles.
- Though the first practical device for generating electricity from ocean waves was built a century ago, such generators are still not economically and technically proven on a large scale. Most have been based on the oscillation of water in vertical columns, driving turbines either directly or via air compressed by the water. Recently other techniques have been investigated, mainly in the UK, using hinged rafts, compressible air-bags, or chains of rocking devices.

waveband /'weɪvbænd/ n. a range of (esp. radio) wavelengths between certain limits.

waveguide /'weɪvgaɪd/ n. Electr. a metal tube etc. confining and conveying microwaves.

wavelength /'weɪvleŋθ, -leŋkθ/ n. 1 the distance between successive crests of a wave, esp. points in a sound wave or electromagnetic wave (symbol: λ). 2 this as a distinctive feature of radio waves from a transmitter. 3 colloq. a particular mode or range of thinking and communicating (we don't seem to be on the same wavelength).

wavelet /'weɪvlɪt/ n. a small wave on water.

waver /'weɪvə(r)/ v.intr. 1 be or become unsteady; falter; begin to give way. 2 be irresolute or undecided between different courses or opinions; be shaken in resolution or belief. 3 (of a light) flicker. □ waverer n. waveringly adv. [ME f. ON vafra flicker f. Gmc, rel. to WAVE] wavy /'weɪvɪ/ adj. (wavier, waviest) (of a line or surface) having waves or alternate contrary curves (wavy hair). □ wavily adv. waviness n.

Webb[1] /web/, (Gladys) Mary (1881–1927), English novelist. Her novels, representative of much regional English fiction popular at the beginning of the century, include Gone to Earth (1917) and Precious Bane (1924). The earthy subject-matter and purple prose typical of her writing were satirized in Cold Comfort Farm by the English novelist Stella Gibbons (1902–89).

Webb[2] /web/, (Martha) Beatrice (née Potter) (1858–1943) and Sidney (James), Baron Passfield (1859–1947), English socialists, economists, and historians. After their marriage in 1892, they were prominent members of the Fabian Society, and helped to establish the London School of Economics (1895). Together they wrote several important books on socio-political theory and history, including The History of Trade Unionism (1894) and Industrial Democracy (1897), as well as founding the weekly magazine the New Statesman (1913). Sidney Webb became a Labour MP in 1922 and served in the first two Labour governments.

Weber[1] /ˈveɪbə(r)/, Carl Maria (Friedrich Ernst) von (1786–1826), German composer. He is regarded as the founder of the German romantic school of opera. In contrast to the prevailing classical school, his opera Der Freischütz (1817–21) turned to German folklore for its subject-matter, and was immediately successful. His German grand opera Euryanthe (1822–3) gave prominence to the orchestration and made use of leitmotifs; both operas were to influence Wagner.

Weber[2] /ˈveɪbə(r)/, Max (1864–1920), German economist and sociologist. His writings on the relationship between economy and society established him as one of the founders of modern sociology. In his celebrated book The Protestant Ethic and the Spirit of Capitalism (1904), Weber argued that there was a direct relationship between the Protestant work ethic and the rise of Western capitalism. Other works include Economy and Society (1922).

Weber[3] /ˈveɪb(ə)r/, Wilhelm Eduard (1804–91), German physicist. His early researches were in acoustics and animal locomotion, but he is chiefly remembered for his contributions in the fields of electricity and magnetism. Weber proposed a unified system for electrical units, determined the ratio between the units of electrostatic and electromagnetic charge, and devised a law of electrical force (later replaced by Maxwell's field theory). He went on to investigate electrodynamics and the nature and role of the electric charge.

weber /ˈveɪbə(r)/ n. Physics the SI unit of magnetic flux (symbol: Wb), equal to 100 million maxwells. One weber of magnetic flux would induce an EMF of one volt in a circuit of one turn when generated or removed in one second. [WEBER[3]]

Webern /ˈveɪb(ə)n/, Anton (Friedrich Ernst) von (1883–1945), Austrian composer. He followed the development of the work of his teacher Schoenberg from tonality to atonality; this departure is evident in his 1908–9 setting of songs by the German poet Stefan George (1868–1933). His music is marked by its brevity; the atonal Five Pieces for Orchestra (1911–13) lasts under a minute. Together with Berg, Webern became the leading exponent of the serialism developed by Schoenberg. Important serial works include the Symphony (1928) and the Variations for Orchestra (1940). During the Second World War his work was denounced by the Nazis. He was shot, accidentally, by an American soldier during the postwar occupation of Austria.

website n. a location connected to the Internet that maintains one or more web pages.

Webster[1] /ˈwebstə(r)/, John (*c.*1580–*c.*1625), English dramatist. He wrote several plays in collaboration with other dramatists but his reputation rests chiefly on two revenge tragedies, The White Devil (1612) and The Duchess of Malfi (1623). His plays were not popular in his own day but had a revival in the 19th century.

Webster[2] /ˈwebstə(r)/, Noah (1758–1843), American lexicographer. His American Dictionary of the English Language (1828) in two volumes was the first dictionary to give comprehensive coverage of American usage and his name survives in the many dictionaries produced by the American publishing house Merriam-Webster. These include the collegiate dictionaries, published since 1898, and Webster's Third New International Dictionary of the English Language (1961).

Wedekind /ˈveɪdəˌkɪnt/, Frank (1864–1918), German dramatist. He was a key figure in the emergence of expressionist drama. His play The Awakening of Spring (1891) scandalized contemporary German society with its explicit and sardonic portrayal of sexual awakening. Wedekind later attacked the bourgeois sexual code at the turn of the century in his two tragedies Earth Spirit (1895) and Pandora's Box (1904), both featuring the femme fatale Lulu. The plays form the basis of Berg's opera Lulu.

Wedgwood^{1} /ˈwedʒwʊd/ Josiah (1730–95), English potter. He earned an international reputation with the pottery factories that he established in Staffordshire in the 1760s. These produced both practical and ornamental ware, maintaining high standards of quality despite large-scale production. Wedgwood's designs, and those of his chief designer John Flaxman, were often based on antique relief sculptures and contributed to the rise of neoclassical taste in England. His name is perhaps most associated with the powder-blue stoneware pieces with white embossed cameos that first appeared in 1775.

Wedgwood^{2} /ˈwedʒwʊd/ n. propr. 1 ceramic ware made by Josiah Wedgwood and his successors, esp. a kind of fine stoneware usu. with a white cameo design. Cf. JASPER 2. 2 the characteristic pale blue colour of some Wedgwood stoneware.

[OE wice f. Gmc, prob. orig. = sequence]

▪ Days were grouped in sevens by the ancient Babylonians, who named them after the five planets known in ancient astronomy and the sun and the moon; each day bore the name of the planet supposed to govern its first hour. The Romans later adopted a similar system, introducing planetary names shortly before the Christian era; the English names for Saturday, Sunday, and Monday are based on these planetary names (Saturn, Sun, and Moon), while names for the other days of the week are derived from Anglo-Saxon words for Norse gods (see individual entries). The concept of a day of rest specially dedicated to God was retained from Judaism by the first Christians, and soon transferred to the first day of the week in honour of the Resurrection, which was said to have taken place on that day. The five-day working week was introduced in Britain and the US from the 1930s.

Weil /vaɪl, French vɛj/, Simone (1909–43), French essayist, philosopher, and mystic. Weil deliberately chose to work in a Renault car factory (1934–5) and to serve in the Spanish Civil War on the Republican side (1936). Two years later she had the first in a series of mystical experiences which had a profound influence on her writing; she did not, however, affiliate herself to any established religion. During the Second World War, Weil joined the resistance movement in England, where she died from tuberculosis while weakened by voluntary privations. Her reputation is based on the posthumous publication of such autobiographical works as Waiting for God (1949) and Notebooks (1951–6).

Weill /vaɪl/, Kurt (1900–50), German composer, resident in the US from 1935. In 1926 Weill married the Austrian singer Lotte Lenya (1900–81), for whom many of his songs were written. He was based in Berlin until 1933 and is best known for the operas he wrote in collaboration with Bertolt Brecht, political satires which evoke the harsh decadence of the pre-war period in Germany and which are marked by his direct and harmonically simple style of composition. These include The Rise and Fall of the City of Mahagonny (1927) and The Threepenny Opera (1928).

Weil's disease /vaɪlz/ n. Med. a severe, sometimes fatal, form of leptospirosis with fever, jaundice, and muscle pain, transmitted by rats via contaminated water. [H. Adolf Weil, Ger. physician (1848–1916)]

Weismann /'vaɪsmən/, August Friedrich Leopold (1834–1914), German biologist, one of the founders of modern genetics. He expounded the theory of germ plasm, a substance which he postulated bore the factors that determine the transmission of characters from parent to offspring. The theory ruled out the transmission of acquired characteristics. Weismann realized that reproduction involved the halving and later reuniting of chromosomes, and suggested that variability came from their recombination.

Weissmuller /'waɪsˌmʊlə(r)/, John Peter ('Johnny') (1904–84), American swimmer and actor. He won three Olympic gold medals in 1924 and two in 1928. He was the first man to swim 100 metres in under a minute and set twenty-eight world records in freestyle events. He later achieved wider recognition as the star of the Tarzan films of the 1930s and 1940s.

Weizmann /'vaɪtsmən, 'waɪzmən/, Chaim (Azriel) (1874–1952), Israeli statesman, President 1949–52. Born in Russia, he became a British citizen in 1910. A supporter of Zionism from the early 1900s, Weizmann participated in the negotiations that led to the Balfour Declaration (1917), which outlined British support for a Jewish homeland in Palestine. He later served as president of the World Zionist Organization (1920–31; 1935–46), facilitating Jewish immigration into Palestine in the 1930s. Weizmann also played an important role in persuading the US government to recognize the new state of Israel (1948) and became its first President in 1949.

Welles /welz/, (George) Orson (1915–85), American film director and actor. Welles formed his own Mercury Theatre company and caused a public sensation in 1938 with a radio dramatization of H. G. Wells's The War of the Worlds, whose realism and contemporary American setting persuaded many listeners that a Martian invasion was really happening. Turning to films, he produced, directed, wrote, and acted in the critically acclaimed Citizen Kane (1941), based on the life of the newspaper tycoon William Randolph Hearst. Welles was an important figure in the film noir genre as shown by such films as The Lady from Shanghai (1948), in which he co-starred with his second wife Rita Hayworth. His best-known film performance was as Harry Lime in The Third Man (1949).

Wellington^{1} /'welɪŋtən/ the capital of New Zealand, situated at the southern tip of North Island; pop. (1991) 150,300. The city was established in 1840 and named after the Duke of Wellington. It became capital in 1865, when the seat of government was moved from Auckland.

Wells /welz/, H(erbert) G(eorge) (1866–1946), English novelist. After studying biology with T. H. Huxley, he wrote some of the earliest science-fiction novels, such as The Time Machine (1895) and The War of the Worlds (1898). These combined political satire, warnings about the dangerous new powers of science, and a hope for the future. In 1903 Wells joined the Fabian Society; his socialism was reflected in several comic novels about lower-middle-class life, including Kipps (1905) and The History of Mr Polly (1910). He is also noted for much speculative writing about the future of society, particularly in The Shape of Things to Come (1933).

▪ Welsh belongs to the Brythonic group of the Celtic languages. It is spoken by about 500,000 people in Wales, mostly in the north and west, and has a substantial literature dating from the medieval period. After the Act of Union with England in 1536 the number of Welsh speakers began to decline; its survival was assisted by the publication of a Bible in Welsh in 1588. Revivals in the 18th, 19th, and particularly the 20th century led to a halt in the decline; Welsh now has official status (with English) in Wales, and is taught in schools. In addition, a Welsh television channel was established in the 1970s.

Werner^{1} /ˈvɜːnə(r)/, Abraham Gottlob (1749–1817), German geologist. He was the chief exponent of the Neptunian theory, which included the belief that rocks such as granites (now known to be of igneous origin) were formed as crystalline precipitates from a primeval ocean. Although this theory was invalid, the controversy that it stimulated prompted a rapid increase in geological research, and Werner's was probably the first attempt to establish a universal stratigraphic sequence.

Werner^{2} /ˈvɜːnə(r)/, Alfred (1866–1919), French-born Swiss chemist, founder of coordination chemistry. He demonstrated that stereochemistry was not just the property of carbon compounds, but was general to the whole of chemistry. In 1893 he announced his theory of chemical coordination, proposing a secondary or residual form of valency to explain the structures of coordination compounds. He was awarded the Nobel Prize for chemistry in 1913.

His writing is associated with British kitchen-sink drama of the 1950s and his plays, reflecting his commitment to socialism, often deal with the working-class search for cultural identity, as in Roots (1959). He is also noted for Chips with Everything (1962), a study of class attitudes in the RAF during national service, and The Merchant (1977), which reworks the story of Shylock in an indictment of anti-Semitism.

Wesley /ˈwezlɪ/, John (1703–91), English preacher and co-founder of Methodism. He became the leader of a small group in Oxford, formed in 1729 by his brother Charles (1707–88); its members were nicknamed the 'Methodists'. In 1738 John Wesley experienced a spiritual conversion as a result of a reading in London of Luther's preface to the Epistle to the Romans. He resolved to devote his life to evangelistic work; however, when Anglican opposition caused the churches to be closed to him, he and his followers began preaching out of doors. Wesley subsequently travelled throughout Britain winning many working-class converts and widespread support of the Anglican clergy. Despite his wish for Methodism to remain within the Church of England, his practice of ordaining his missionaries himself (since the Church refused to do so) brought him increasing opposition from the Anglican establishment and eventual exclusion; the Methodists formally separated from the Church of England in 1791.

Wesleyan /ˈwezlɪən/ adj. & n. ● adj. of or relating to John Wesley, his doctrines, or Christian denominations based on them. ● n. a member of any of these denominations. □ Wesleyanism n.

Wessex /ˈwesɪks/ the kingdom of the West Saxons, established in Hampshire in the early 6th century and gradually extended by conquest to include much of southern England. Under Alfred the Great and his successors it formed the nucleus of the Anglo-Saxon kingdom of England. Athelstan, Alfred's grandson, became king of England. The name was revived in the 19th century by Thomas Hardy to designate the south-western counties of England (especially Dorset) in which his novels are set.

West^{1} /west/, Benjamin (1738–1820), American painter, resident in Britain from 1763. He was appointed historical painter to George III in 1769 and became the second president of the Royal Academy on Joshua Reynolds's death in 1792. His portrait The Death of General Wolfe (1771) depicted its subject in contemporary rather than classical dress, signifying a new departure in English historical painting.

West^{2} /west/, Mae (1892–1980), American actress and dramatist. She made her name on Broadway appearing in her own comedies Sex (1926) and Diamond Lil (1928), which were memorable for their frank and spirited approach to sexual matters; the former resulted in a short period of imprisonment for alleged obscenity. In the early 1930s West began her long and successful Hollywood career; major films included She Done Him Wrong (1933) and Klondike Annie (1936). She is also noted for the autobiography Goodness Had Nothing To Do With It (1959). (Cf. MAE WEST.)

West^{3} /west/, Dame Rebecca (born Cicily Isabel Fairfield) (1892–1983), British writer and feminist, born in Ireland. From 1911 she wrote journalistic articles in support of women's suffrage, adopting 'Rebecca West' as her pseudonym after one of Ibsen's heroines. She was sent to report on Yugoslavia in 1937, publishing her observations in the Black Lamb and Grey Falcon (1942) in two volumes. Her other works include The Meaning of Treason (1949), a study of the psychology of traitors, and A Train of Power (1955), a critique of the Nuremberg war trials. West's many novels include The Fountain Overflows (1957).

western /ˈwestən/ adj. & n. ● adj. 1 of or in the west; inhabiting the west. 2 lying or directed towards the west. 3 (Western) of or relating to the West (see WEST n. 2). ● n. a film, television drama, or novel belonging to a genre depicting life in the western US during the 19th and early 20th centuries, usu. featuring cowboys in heroic roles, gunfights, etc. (See note below.) □ westernmost adj. [OE westerne (as WEST, -ERN)]

▪ The western developed in the US pulp fiction of the 19th century, glamorizing the lawless world of the Wild West, and became an established form with novels such as The Virginian (1902) by Owen Wister (1860–1938) and Riders of the Purple Sage (1912) by Zane Grey (1872–1939). Westerns constitute the oldest and most enduring genre in cinema: in 1908–14 D. W. Griffith made a number of one-reel westerns, and by the 1920s the western was internationally accepted. In the 1930s many of the conventions of the genre became established, such as the opposition between heroic cowboy and villainous Indian, and popular characters such as the Lone Ranger and Hopalong Cassidy emerged. One of the best-known westerns of this period is Stagecoach (1939), directed by John Ford and starring John Wayne. Other famous films from the western's heyday include High Noon (1952) and Shane (1953), and there were many television drama series. From the 1960s the western became less popular, and films such as the spaghetti westerns of the Italian director Sergio Leone (1928–89), mainly starring Clint Eastwood, and films by Sam Peckinpah (1925–84), and Eastwood himself, have often portrayed violence and brutality much more explicitly and in other ways departed from earlier conventions of the genre.

westerner /ˈwestənə(r)/ n. a native or inhabitant of the west.

Western Front the zone of fighting in western Europe in the First World War, in which the German army engaged the armies to its west, i.e. France, the UK (and its dominions), and, from 1917, the US. For most of the war the front line stretched from the Vosges mountains in eastern France through Amiens to Ostend in Belgium. Fighting began in Aug. 1914: German forces attacking through Belgium were checked in the first battle of the Marne and then at Ypres, after which both sides engaged in trench warfare, the distinctive feature of warfare on this front. Battles were inconclusive with heavy casualties on both sides, notably at Verdun, the Somme, and Passchendaele. Early in 1917 the Germans withdrew to the Hindenburg Line, a fortified line of trenches that was not breached for more than a year; after the entry of the US into the war in 1917, US forces in the region helped to tip the balance in the Allies' favour.

West Indies 1 a chain of islands extending from the Florida peninsula to the coast of Venezuela, lying between the Caribbean and the Atlantic. They consist of three main island groups, the Greater and Lesser Antilles and the Bahamas, with Bermuda lying further to the north. Originally inhabited by Arawak and Carib Indians, the islands were visited by Columbus in 1492 and named by him in the belief that he had discovered the coast of India. The Spanish settlements of the 16th and 17th centuries were fiercely contested by other European powers, principally the British, the French, and the Dutch; the region became notorious for buccaneering and piracy in the 17th century. Many of the islands became British colonies in the 17th and 18th centuries, and were centres for the cultivation of sugar on large plantations worked by slaves imported from West Africa. The islands now consist of a number of independent states and British, French, Dutch, and US dependencies. 2 an international cricket team drawn from Trinidad, Jamaica, Barbados, Guyana, and other former British dependencies in the region. □ West Indian adj. & n.

▪ Whales are adapted for an exclusively aquatic life, having a somewhat fishlike body with forelimbs modified as flippers and no hindlimbs. There are two main groups: the toothed whales (suborder Odontoceti), which include the sperm whales, killer whales, dolphins, and porpoises, and the baleen whales (suborder Mysticeti), which feed on plankton and include the blue whale, the largest of all animals. Whales are intelligent and sociable creatures and communicate by sound. Toothed whales use a form of echolocation, especially for detecting prey, and some can dive to great depths and stay under water for an hour or more. In recent decades commercial whaling has endangered many species, especially the blue, right, and humpback whales. (See also WHALING.)

whaling /ˈweɪlɪŋ/ n. the practice or industry of hunting and killing whales, especially for their oil, meat, ambergris, or whalebone. Native American and Eskimo peoples hunted whales in early times, while in Europe Basque whalers operated in the Bay of Biscay during the Middle Ages. However, it was the development in the 18th century of facilities to process whale products at sea, and of the explosive harpoon in the mid-19th century, that led to whales being killed in far greater numbers. Alarm over the rapidly declining whale population led the International Whaling Commission (which had been established in 1947) to introduce a moratorium on commercial whaling in 1985, a decision ratified in subsequent conventions. Several countries opposed the commercial ban: Japan, South Korea, and Iceland continued to kill whales, under a provision for small numbers to be killed for scientific purposes. In 1992 Iceland withdrew from the IWC, while Norway decided to resume commercial whaling in defiance of the moratorium. In 1994 the IWC voted to establish a whale sanctuary in the Antarctic Ocean south of the 40th parallel, a decision opposed only by Japan, although Norway and others abstained from the vote.

Gmc]

- The wheel is regarded as one of the most important inventions, first recorded in Mesopotamia about 3500 BC, made of solid wood; it was unknown in the pre-Columbian civilizations of Central America other than Mexico. Spoked wheels appeared soon after 2000 BC; iron tyres were used to protect and strengthen the rim. A wheel using wire spokes in tension was evolved for the bicycle: by arranging alternate spokes to lead to opposite flanges of the hub and be tangential to the hub in the forward and backward directions the result was a strong lightweight wheel able to transmit a torque from hub to rim. One of the more recent developments is that of pneumatic tyres, making it easier for vehicles to traverse uneven surfaces.

Sc. rebels (see below), f. whig to drive + MARE^1]

- The Whigs acquired their name as a derogatory reference to a group of Scottish Covenanters by their opponents, the Tories, during the exclusion crisis (1679) of Charles II's reign, in which they attempted to prevent James, Duke of York (later James II) from succeeding to the English throne. Until the second half of the 18th century, the Whigs constituted a political interest group which was composed of a loose alliance of the country aristocracy and various trading interests, functioning largely through patronage. Opponents of Jacobitism and advocates of the supremacy of Parliament and the Hanoverian succession, the Whigs dominated the English political scene in the late 17th and first half of the 18th century. After 1784, in the aftermath of the War of American Independence, there was considerable realignment of party interests and a new Whig party emerged, championing the interests of religious dissenters and those who sought electoral and social reform. There was further regrouping after the French Revolution and in the early 19th century the Whigs continued to advocate electoral reform, passing the Reform Act of 1832. In the middle of the century the term Liberal gradually replaced Whig.

Whitby /ˈwɪtbɪ/ a town on the coast of North Yorkshire. NE England; pop. (1991) 13.640.

Whitby, Synod of a conference held in Whitby in 664 that resolved the differences between the Celtic and Roman forms of Christian worship in England, in particular the method of calculating the date of Easter. The Northumbrian Christians had followed the Celtic method of fixing the date while those of the south had adopted the Roman system. King Oswy (612–70) of Northumbria decided in favour of Rome, and England as a result effectively severed the connection with the Celtic Church. An account of the proceedings is given by Bede.

White^{1} /waɪt/, Gilbert (1720–93), English clergyman and naturalist. He spent most of his life in his native village of Selborne, Hampshire, becoming curate there in 1784. Whitman /ˈwɪtmən/, Walt (1819–92), American poet. His philosophical outlook was profoundly influenced by his experience of frontier life in his travels to Chicago and St Louis in 1848, as well as by transcendentalist ideas, in particular the work of Emerson. He published the first edition of Leaves of Grass, incorporating 'I Sing the Body Electric' and 'Song of Myself', in 1855; eight further editions followed in Whitman's lifetime, the work enlarging as the poet developed. Written in free verse, the collection celebrates democracy, sexuality, the self, and the liberated American spirit in union with nature. It was criticized as immoral during his lifetime and later formed the basis of the claims that he was homosexual. In Drum-Taps (1865), Whitman recorded his impressions as a hospital visitor during the American Civil War. The Sequel (1865) to these poems included his elegy on Lincoln, 'When Lilacs Last in the Dooryard Bloom'd'.

Whitney /ˈwɪtnɪ/, Eli (1765–1825), American inventor. He devised the mechanical cotton-gin (patented 1794), as well as conceiving the idea of mass-producing interchangeable parts. This he applied in his fulfilment of a US government contract (1797) to supply muskets; Whitney manufactured these in standardized parts for reassembly, meaning that for the first time worn parts could be replaced by spares rather than requiring special replacements to be made.

Whitney, Mount /ˈwɪtnɪ/ a mountain in the Sierra Nevada in California. Rising to 4,418 m (14,495 ft), it is the highest peak in the continental US outside Alaska.

Whitsun /ˈwɪts(ə)n/ n. & adj. ● n. = WHITSUNTIDE. ● adj. = WHIT. [ME, f. Whitsun Day = Whit Sunday]

Whit Sunday in the Christian Church, the seventh Sunday after Easter, commemorating the descent of the Holy Spirit on the Apostles at Pentecost (Acts 2). 'Whit' derives from an earlier form of 'White', and probably refers to the white robes of the newly baptized at Pentecost; in the Western Church the festival became a date for baptisms.

Whittier /ˈwɪtɪə(r)/, John Greenleaf (1807–92), American poet and abolitionist. From the early 1840s he edited various periodicals and wrote poetry for the abolitionist cause. He is best known for his poems on rural themes, especially 'Snow-Bound' (1866).

Whittington /ˈwɪtɪŋtən/, Sir Richard ('Dick') (d.1423), English merchant and Lord Mayor of London. Whittington was a London mercer who became Lord Mayor three times (1397–8; 1406–7; 1419–20). He left legacies for rebuilding Newgate Prison and for establishing a city library. The popular legend of Dick Whittington's early life as an orphan from a lowly background, his only possession a cat, is first recorded in 1605.

Whittle /ˈwɪt(ə)l/, Sir Frank (1907–96), English aeronautical engineer, test pilot, and inventor of the jet aircraft engine. He took out the first patent for a turbojet engine in 1930 while still a student. A Gloster aircraft made the first British flight using Whittle's jet engine in May 1941 (two years after the first German jet aircraft), and similar machines later entered service with the RAF. He took up a post at the US Naval Academy in Maryland in 1977.

Wilde /waɪld/, Oscar (Fingal O'Flahertie Wills) (1854–1900), Irish dramatist, novelist, poet, and wit. He was born in Dublin but from the early 1880s spent most of his time in London. He became known for his flamboyant aestheticism and his advocacy of 'art for art's sake' regardless of moral stance; this is particularly evident in his only novel The Picture of Dorian Gray, published in 1890. As a dramatist he achieved considerable success with a series of comedies noted for their epigrammatic wit and sharp social observation, including Lady Windermere's Fan (1892) and The Importance of Being Earnest (1895). However, Wilde's drama Salomé (1893), written in French, was refused a performing licence; it was published in English in 1894 and first performed in Paris in 1896. Wilde's relationship with Lord Alfred Douglas (1870–1945) resulted in his imprisonment for homosexual offences (1895–7); he died in exile in Paris.

Wilhelm I /ˈvɪlhelm/ (1797–1888), king of Prussia 1861–88 and emperor of Germany 1871–88. His reign saw the unification of Germany, the driving force behind which was Bismarck, his chief minister. He became the first emperor of Germany after Prussia's victory against France in 1871. The latter part of his reign was marked by the rise of German socialism, to which he responded with harsh repressive measures.

Wilhelm II /ˈvɪlhelm/ (known as Kaiser Wilhelm) (1859–1941), emperor of Germany 1888–1918, grandson of Queen Victoria. After forcing his chief minister, Bismarck, to resign in 1890 he proved unable to exercise a strong or consistent influence over German policies, which became increasingly militaristic in foreign affairs. He was unable to prevent the outbreak of the First World War (1914), and was vilified by Allied propaganda as the author of the conflict. In 1918 he went into exile in Holland and abdicated his throne.

William /ˈwɪljəm/ the name of two kings of England, and two of Great Britain and Ireland:

William I (known as William the Conqueror) (*c.*1027–87), reigned 1066–87, the first Norman king of England. He was the illegitimate son of Robert, Duke of Normandy and claimed the English throne on the death of Edward the Confessor, stating that Edward had promised it to him. He landed in England at the head of an invasion force, defeated Harold II at the Battle of Hastings (1066), and was crowned king. Having repressed a series of uprisings, he imposed his rule on England, introducing Norman institutions and customs (including feudalism and administrative and legal practices). He also instigated the property survey of England known as the Domesday Book.

William II (known as William Rufus = 'red-faced') (*c.*1060–1100), son of William I, reigned 1087–1100. His succession was challenged by a group of Norman barons in England who wanted William's elder brother Robert Curthose (*c.*1054–1134), Duke of Normandy, to rule England instead. However, William's forces crushed their rebellions in 1088 and 1095. William also campaigned against his brother Robert in Normandy (1089–96), ultimately acquiring the duchy in 1096 when Robert mortgaged it to William before leaving to go on the First Crusade. In the north of England William secured the frontier against the Scots along a line from the Solway Firth to the Tweed. He was killed by an arrow while out hunting; whether he was assassinated or whether his death was an accident remains unclear.

William III (known as William of Orange) (1650–1702), grandson of Charles I, reigned 1689–1702. Son of the Prince of Orange and Mary, daughter of Charles I, William was stadtholder (chief magistrate) of the Netherlands from 1672 and married Mary, daughter of the future James II, in 1677. In 1688 he landed in England at the invitation of disaffected politicians, deposed James II, and, having accepted the Declaration of Rights, was crowned along with his wife the following year. He defeated James's supporters in Scotland and Ireland (1689–90), and thereafter devoted most of his energies towards opposing the territorial ambitions of Louis XIV of France.

William IV (known as 'the Sailor King') (1765–1837), son of George III, reigned 1830–7. He served in the Royal Navy from 1779, rising to Lord High Admiral in 1827, and came to the throne after the death of his brother George IV. Although an opponent of the first Reform Bill (1832), William reluctantly agreed to create fifty new peers to overcome opposition to it in the House of Lords. In 1834 he intervened in political affairs by imposing his own choice of Prime Minister (the Conservative Robert Peel), despite a Whig majority in Parliament.

William I (known as William the Lion) (1143–1214), grandson of David I, king of Scotland 1165–1214. He attempted to reassert Scottish independence but was forced to pay homage to Henry II of England after being captured by him in 1174.

William of Occam /ˈɒkəm/ (also Ockham) (*c.*1285–1349), English philosopher and Franciscan friar. He studied and taught philosophy at Oxford until 1324; in the later part of his life (1333–47) he lived in Munich and was active in writing anti-papal pamphlets. He was the last of the major scholastic philosophers; his form of nominalist philosophy saw God as beyond human powers of reasoning, and things as provable only by experience or by scriptural authority — hence his maxim, known as Occam's razor, that explanations should be examined and unnecessary assumptions stripped away. Occam distinguished between faith and reason, advocated a radical separation of the Church from the world, denied the pope all temporal authority, and conceded large powers to the laity and their representatives. He was also a firm supporter of the Franciscan doctrine of poverty; this brought strong papal opposition and he was excommunicated in 1328. His ideas had a significant influence on Luther.

William of Orange, William III of Great Britain and Ireland (see William).

William Rufus, William II of England (see William).

Williams^1 /ˈwɪljəmz/, John (Christopher) (b.1941), Australian guitarist and composer. He studied with Andrés Segovia before making his London début in 1958. Based in Britain, he became much in demand as a recitalist, noted for an eclectic repertoire that includes both classical and popular music. In 1979 he founded the pop group Sky, playing with them until 1984.

Williams^2 /ˈwɪljəmz/, J(ohn) P(eter) R(hys) (b.1949), Welsh Rugby Union player. A former junior Wimbledon tennis champion (1966), he made his rugby début for Wales in 1969 and became one of the leading full-backs of the 1970s. Williams played sixty-three times for his country (1969–81), as well as for the British Lions (1971–7). In 1981 he retired from rugby to pursue a career in orthopaedic medicine.

Williams^3 /ˈwɪljəmz/, Tennessee (born Thomas Lanier Williams) (1911–83), American dramatist. He was brought up in the South, the setting for many of his plays. He achieved success with the semi-autobiographical The Glass Menagerie (1944) and A Streetcar Named Desire (1947), plays which deal with the tragedy of vulnerable heroines living in fragile fantasy worlds shattered by brutal reality. Williams's later plays, while still dealing with strong passions and family tensions, increasingly feature Gothic and macabre elements; they include Cat on a Hot Tin Roof (1955), Suddenly Last Summer (1958), and The Night of the Iguana (1962).

Williams^4 /ˈwɪljəmz/, William Carlos (1883–1963), American poet, essayist, novelist, and short-story writer. He worked throughout his life as a paediatrician in his native New Jersey. His poetry illuminates the ordinary by vivid, direct observation; it is characterized by avoidance of emotional content and the use of the American vernacular. Collections of his poetry include Spring and All (1923) and Pictures from Brueghel (1963). His long poem Paterson (1946–58), written in free verse, draws on and explores the cultural, historical, and mythic resonances associated with the industrial New Jersey city of Paterson. Non-fiction works include In the American Grain (1925), essays exploring the nature of American literature and the influence of Puritanism in American culture.

Wilson^{1} /ˈwɪls(ə)n/, Sir Angus (Frank Johnstone) (1913–91), English novelist and short-story writer. His works include the novels Anglo-Saxon Attitudes (1956), The Old Men at the Zoo (1961), and Setting the World on Fire (1980). These, together with several volumes of short stories, display his satiric wit, acute social observation, and a love of the macabre and the farcical. He also wrote studies of Zola, Dickens, and Kipling.

Wilson^{2} /ˈwɪls(ə)n/, Charles Thomson Rees (1869–1959), Scottish physicist. He is chiefly remembered for inventing the cloud chamber, building his first one in 1895 in an attempt to reproduce the conditions in which clouds are formed in nature. He later improved the design and by 1911 had a chamber in which the track of an ion could be made visible. This became a major tool of particle physicists in subsequent years, and Wilson shared a Nobel Prize for physics in 1927. He also investigated atmospheric electricity and thundercloud formation, and predicted the discovery of cosmic rays.

Wilson^{3} /ˈwɪls(ə)n/, Edmund (1895–1972), American critic, essayist, and short-story writer. He is remembered chiefly for works of literary and social criticism, which include Axel's Castle (1931), a study of symbolist literature, To the Finland Station (1940), tracing socialist and revolutionary theory, and Patriotic Gore: Studies in the Literature of the American Civil War (1962). He was a friend of F. Scott Fitzgerald, and edited the latter's unfinished novel The Last Tycoon (published posthumously in 1941). Wilson's third wife was the novelist Mary McCarthy.

Wilson^{4} /ˈwɪls(ə)n/, Edward Osborne (b.1929), American social biologist. He has worked principally on social insects, notably ants and termites, extrapolating his findings to the social behaviour of other animals including humans. His book Sociobiology: the New Synthesis (1975) integrated these ideas and effectively launched the science of sociobiology. Wilson has also studied the colonization of islands by insects, showing that the number of species reaches a dynamic equilibrium for any given island.

Wilson^{5} /ˈwɪls(ə)n/, (James) Harold, Baron Wilson of Rievaulx (1916–95), British Labour statesman, Prime Minister 1964–70 and 1974–6. His administrations were pragmatic in outlook rather than rigidly socialist. In both terms of office he faced severe economic problems; repeated sterling crises led to devaluation in 1967, while he attempted unsuccessfully to deal with high inflation in 1974–6 by seeking an agreement with trade unions over limiting pay increases. His government introduced a number of social reforms, including reducing the voting age to 18, liberalizing the laws on divorce, homosexuality, and abortion, and introducing comprehensive schooling. Overseas, he was unable to persuade the regime of Ian Smith in Rhodesia (Zimbabwe) to back down over its declaration of independence (1965), and therefore introduced economic sanctions against Rhodesia. In 1974 Wilson renegotiated Britain's terms of entry into the European Economic Community, confirming British membership after a referendum in 1975. He resigned as leader of the Labour Party the following year and was replaced as Prime Minister by James Callaghan.

Wilson^{6} /ˈwɪls(ə)n/, (Thomas) Woodrow (1856–1924), American Democratic statesman, 28th President of the US 1913–21. He was a prominent academic in the field of law and political economy prior to his election victory. As President he carried out a series of successful administrative and fiscal reforms. He initially kept America out of the First World War, but, following the German reintroduction of unrestricted submarine warfare, entered the war on the Allied side in April 1917. Wilson's conditions for a peace treaty, as set out in his 'Fourteen Points' speech (1918), and his plan for the formation of the League of Nations were crucial in the international negotiations surrounding the end of the war, and he was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize in 1919. However, he was unable to obtain the Senate's ratification of the Treaty of Versailles, his health collapsed, and he lost the 1920 presidential election.

Gmc]

▪ Wind power has been used for centuries to drive windmills for grinding corn (see WINDMILL); the wind pump, first developed in the 15th century in the Netherlands for drainage purposes, was adapted for raising water from deep wells in the US and Australia. The first wind-powered electric generator was built in Denmark in 1890, and in the next fifty years many low-power machines were erected on farms etc. After the Second World War more powerful generators were developed, using two or three aerofoil blades, sometimes with a vertical axis. Wind power is a relatively expensive method of generating electricity, though some modern wind turbines are capable of producing up to three megawatts and commercial wind farms have been developed in the US (particularly in California and the Midwest) and elsewhere.

- Windmills for grinding corn originated in Persia in the 7th century, those with horizontal geared shafts appearing in Europe in the 12th century. In early post-mills the entire body of the mill was rotated manually to face the wind; the development of the fantail in the 18th century enabled the cap and sails to face the wind automatically. The sails were originally of canvas, English windmills adopting wooden sails with pivoted slats for greater control. Few windmills are used for grinding corn today, though many small multi-bladed windmills for pumping water are still in use (see WIND^{1}).

witchcraft /'wɪtʃkrɑːft/ n. 1 the use of magic or sorcery. (See note below.) 2 power or influence like that of a witch; bewitching charm.

- Witchcraft, which has a long history around the world, became associated in Christianity with demonic possession and rejection of God in Europe in the early Middle Ages; by the late 12th century cases were being dealt with by the Inquisition. Mass persecutions began to take place in the 15th century in Europe; many people (usually women) were tried as witches, often after accusations from neighbours claiming to have suffered harm; witches were defined by Catholics and later also by Protestants as heretics who obtained their power through a pact with the Devil. After a papal bull of 1484, roughly a thousand people in England were hanged or burned for witchcraft, mostly under Elizabeth I and James I; the last execution was in 1685. On the Continent, and in Scotland, the use of torture produced far more victims and bizarre confessions of sabbaths and night-flying. Belief in witchcraft was also widespread in Puritan communities in North America; more than thirty people were convicted of witchcraft in the notorious trials at Salem, Massachusetts, in 1692. Although belief in witchcraft declined in Europe and America after the 17th century, it continues to be a powerful force in many preliterate and tribal societies. In the 20th century a new kind of witchcraft (known as Wicca) emerged in parts of Europe and North America, claiming its origins in pre-Christian pagan religions.

Wittgenstein /ˈvɪtgənˌstaɪn/, Ludwig (Josef Johann) (1889–1951), Austrian-born philosopher. He came to England in 1911 and studied mathematical logic at Cambridge under Bertrand Russell (1912–13). He then turned to the study of language and its relationship to the world, and in the Tractatus Logico-philosophicus (1921) contended that language achieves meaning by 'picturing' things by established conventions. He also pointed out that logical truths are tautologous because they are necessarily true within their own system and argued that metaphysical speculation is meaningless, theories which influenced the development of logical positivism. He returned to Cambridge in 1929, where he was professor of philosophy (1939–47); he became a British citizen in 1938. Principal among his later works (all published posthumously) is Philosophical Investigations (1953). In this he argues that words take on different roles according to the different human activities in which they are used, and that they do not have definite intrinsic meanings. He showed that some philosophical problems are simply a result of a misunderstanding of the nature of language, as for example the assumption by some earlier philosophers that individual human beings have a private language in which their thoughts as well as their utterances are composed.

Wodehouse /ˈwʊdhaʊs/, Sir P(elham) G(renville) (1881–1975), British-born writer. He was a prolific writer of humorous novels and short stories and his writing career spanned more than seventy years. His best-known works are those set in the leisured English upper-class world of Bertie Wooster and his valet, Jeeves, the first of which appeared in 1917. During the Second World War Wodehouse was interned by the Germans; when released in 1941 he made five radio broadcasts from Berlin, which, although they were comic and non-political in nature, led to accusations in Britain that he was a traitor. He eventually settled in the US, becoming an American citizen in 1955; he was knighted a few weeks before his death.

Wordsworth /ˈwɜːdzwəθ/, William (1770–1850), English poet. He was born in the Lake District and much of his work was inspired by the landscape of this region. He spent some time in France (1790–1) and became an enthusiastic supporter of the French Revolution, although he later became disillusioned by the excesses of the Terror and in later life assumed a more conservative stance. From 1795 to 1799 he lived in Somerset, where, with Coleridge, he composed the Lyrical Ballads (1798), a landmark in the history of English romantic poetry, containing in particular his poem 'Tintern Abbey'. In 1799 he returned to the Lake District, settling in Grasmere with his sister Dorothy (1771–1855); his wife joined them after their marriage in 1802. Among his many poems are the ode 'Intimations of Immortality' (1807), sonnets, such as 'Surprised by Joy' and 'I Wandered Lonely as a Cloud' (both 1815), and the posthumously published autobiographical The Prelude (1850). Wren^{1} /ren/, Sir Christopher (1632–1723), English architect. He turned to architecture in the 1660s after an academic career as a scientist. Following the Great Fire of London (1666) he submitted plans for the rebuilding of the city; although these were never realized, Wren was appointed Surveyor-General of the King's Works in 1669 and was responsible for the design of the new St Paul's Cathedral (1675–1711) and many of the city's churches. The influence of the baroque, seen in elements of St Paul's, is particularly apparent in his Greenwich Hospital (begun 1696). Among Wren's other works are Greenwich Observatory (1675) and a partial rebuilding of Hampton Court (1689–94). He was a founder member and later president of the Royal Society (1680–2).

Wren^{2} /ren/, P(ercival) C(hristopher) (1885–1941), English novelist. He is best known for his romantic adventure stories dealing with life in the French Foreign Legion, the first of which was Beau Geste (1924).

Wright^{1} /raɪt/, Frank Lloyd (1869–1959), American architect. His early work, with its use of new building materials and cubic forms, was particularly significant for the development of modernist architecture, in particular the international style. His 'prairie-style' houses in Chicago revolutionized American domestic architecture in the first decade of the 20th century with their long low horizontal lines and intercommunicating interior spaces. He advocated an 'organic' architecture, characterized by a close relationship between building and landscape and the nature of the materials used, as can be seen in the Kaufmann House (known as 'Falling Water') in Pennsylvania (1935–9), which incorporates natural features such as a waterfall into its design. Other notable buildings include the Johnson Wax office block in Racine, Wisconsin (1936) and the Guggenheim Museum of Art in New York (1956–9).

Wright^{2} /raɪt/, Orville (1871–1948) and Wilbur (1867–1912), American aviation pioneers. ▪ Writing is thought to have begun in Mesopotamia with pictographic signs and to have developed into a formalized system of linear and then cuneiform signs representing first words or ideas, then syllables, and finally individual sounds. The cuneiform system was adopted from the Sumerians by the Akkadians and passed on to Syria in the 3rd millennium BC, to the Assyrians, Hittites, Canaanites, and Egyptians in the 2nd millennium BC, and to the Achaemenid Persians in the 1st millennium BC, after which alphabetic systems of writing began to develop (see ALPHABET). In the Chinese script, pictographic signs developed into ideographs which then proliferated and became standardized into a system of characters similar to that used today.

Wyatt^1 /ˈwaɪət/, James (1746–1813), English architect. Following a six-year stay in Italy, he returned to England, where he built the neoclassical Pantheon in London (1772), later destroyed by fire. Although he continued to build in a neoclassical style, Wyatt became a leading figure in the Gothic revival, most notably with his design for Fonthill Abbey in Wiltshire (1796–1807). He was also involved in the restoration of several English medieval cathedrals, work which was later strongly criticized by Pugin.

Wyatt^2 /ˈwaɪət/, Sir Thomas (1503–42), English poet. He held various diplomatic posts in the service of Henry VIII, one of which took him to Italy (1527), a visit which probably stimulated him to translate and imitate the poems of Petrarch. His work includes sonnets, rondeaux, songs for the lute, and satires. His son, also named Sir Thomas Wyatt (*c.*1521–54), was executed after leading an unsuccessful rebellion against the proposed marriage of Mary I to the future Philip II of Spain.

Wycherley /ˈwɪtʃəlɪ/, William (*c.*1640–1716), English dramatist. His Restoration comedies are characterized by their acute social criticism, particularly of sexual morality and marriage conventions. They include The Gentleman Dancing-Master (1672), The Country Wife (1675), and The Plain-Dealer (1676).

Wyclif /ˈwɪklɪf/, John (also Wycliffe) (*c.*1330–84), English religious reformer. He was a lecturer at Oxford (1361–82) and a prolific writer, whose attacks on medieval theocracy are regarded as precursors of the Reformation. He criticized the wealth and power of the Church, upheld the Bible as the sole guide for doctrine, and questioned the scriptural basis of the papacy; his teachings were disseminated by itinerant preachers. In accordance with his belief that such texts should be accessible to ordinary people, he instituted the first English translation of the complete Bible. He was compelled to retire from Oxford after his attack on the doctrine of transubstantiation and after the Peasants' Revolt (1381), which was blamed on his teaching. The followers of Wyclif were known as Lollards.

X-ray /'eksreɪ/ n. & v. (also x-ray) ● n. 1 (in pl.) electromagnetic radiation of short wavelength, able to pass through opaque bodies. (See note below.) 2 an image made by the effect of X-rays on a photographic plate, esp. showing the position of bones etc. by their greater absorption of the rays. ● v.tr. photograph, examine, or treat with X-rays. □ X-ray crystallography the study of crystals and their structure by means of the diffraction of X-rays by the regularly spaced atoms of a crystalline material. X-ray tube a device for generating X-rays by accelerating electrons to high energies and causing them to strike a metal target from which the X-rays are emitted. [transl. G x-Strahlen (pl.) f. Strahl ray, so called because when discovered in 1895 the nature of the rays was unknown]

- X-rays were discovered in 1895 by Wilhelm Röntgen, who noticed the fluorescence of certain crystals near to an operating cathode-ray tube. He attributed this to a new kind of radiation from the tube which he called X-rays. He discovered that the rays travel in straight lines, that they are not electrical, that they affect photographic plates, and that they have considerable penetrating power. He produced the first X-ray photograph or radiograph of the human hand. By 1912 it was recognized that X-rays are electromagnetic radiation of a very high frequency with wavelengths more than a thousand times smaller than those of visible light. X-rays are produced when very high-velocity electrons strike a target, as in an X-ray tube; the rapid deceleration of the electrons produces a pulse of X-radiation. High doses of X-rays are damaging to living tissue but may be used to treat cancer.

X-ray astronomy n. the observation of celestial objects with instruments capable of detecting and measuring high-energy electromagnetic radiation. Because the atmosphere absorbs practically all cosmic X-rays, it is necessary to place X-ray telescopes and spectrometers in orbiting satellites. Objects known to emit X-rays include the sun, certain cataclysmic variable stars, and galaxies containing extremely hot gas. The detection of X-rays from certain close binary stars offers a potential method of detecting black holes.

Xuzhou /ʃuː'dʒəʊ/ (also Hsu-chou /-'tʃaʊ/, Suchow /suː'tʃaʊ/) a city in Jiangsu province, eastern China; pop. (est. 1990) 910,000. It was formerly known as Tongshan (1912–45).

yachting /ˈjɒtɪŋ/ n. the sport or pastime of racing or cruising in yachts. Yachting was pioneered in the 17th century in the Netherlands, where the sheltered waterways provided the main communication network. Charles II acquired a liking for the sport during his Dutch exile, but it remained an eccentric pursuit in England until yacht racing began, supported by royal patronage, in the mid-18th century. The first English club was formed at Cowes on the Isle of Wight in 1815. Yachting became an Olympic sport in 1900, with events in various classes for yachts having one, two, or three crew members. The most important yachting trophy is the America's Cup; in recent years regular single-handed transatlantic races have also been established.

Yeats /jeɪts/, W(illiam) B(utler) (1865–1939), Irish poet and dramatist. He spent a large part of his life in London, although his interest in Irish cultural and political life remained constant. He was a co-founder of the Irish National Theatre Company (later based at the Abbey Theatre) and his play The Countess Cathleen (1892) began the Irish theatrical revival. He was also prominent in Ireland's cultural and literary revival, which takes its name from his collection of stories The Celtic Twilight (1893). In his poetry, the elaborate style of his earlier work was influenced by the Pre-Raphaelites, while his later work used a sparser, more lyrical, style and was influenced by symbolism, as well as by his interest in mysticism and the occult. His best-known collections from this later period are The Tower (1928), including the poems 'Sailing to Byzantium' and 'Leda and the Swan', and The Winding Stair (1929). Yeats served as a senator of the Irish Free State (1922–8) and was awarded the Nobel Prize for literature in 1923.

Yiddish /'jɪdɪʃ/ n. & adj. ● n. a vernacular language related to German, used by Jews, originally in central and eastern Europe but now also in the US, Israel, and elsewhere. (See note below.) ● adj. of or relating to this language. [G jüdisch Jewish] ▪ Yiddish is written in Hebrew characters, with the difference that vowels are written with separate signs. It originated in the 9th century among the Jews (Ashkenazim) who settled in cities along the Rhine in Germany and adopted the local German dialect, albeit in a form heavily influenced by Hebrew, which remained their literary language. In the 14th century the dialect was carried eastwards, where it took on influences from the Slavonic tongues and developed into the distinct language known as Yiddish. In 1908 it was declared a national Jewish language; despite severe persecution by Germany in the 1930s and 1940s and by the Soviet Union in the 1950s the language survived. It is spoken today by about 200,000 people as a first language and by a further 2 million (largely in the US and Israel) as a second language. It has also had a significant effect on English vocabulary and idiom in the US, providing words such as bagel, schmaltz, and schmuck.

Yugoslavia /ˌju:gə'slɑ:vɪə/ (also Jugoslavia) a former federation of Slavic states in SE Europe, in the Balkans. The country was formed as the Kingdom of Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes in the peace settlements at the end of the First World War. It comprised Serbia, Montenegro, and the former South Slavic provinces of the Austro-Hungarian empire, and assumed the name of Yugoslavia in 1929; its capital was Belgrade. Invaded by the Axis Powers during the Second World War, Yugoslavia emerged from a long guerrilla war as a Communist federal republic. Under the postwar leadership of Marshal Tito, Yugoslavia refused to accept Soviet domination and pursued a policy of non-alignment. Communist authority weakened after Tito's death in 1980, and in 1990 single-party rule was formally ended. Four of the six constituent republics (Slovenia, Croatia, Bosnia-Herzegovina, and Macedonia) then rapidly seceded, amid worsening civil and ethnic conflict. The two remaining republics, Serbia and Montenegro, declared a new federal republic of Yugoslavia in 1992. □ Yugoslavian adj. & n.

(est. 1991) 38,473,000; languages, French (official), Kongo, Lingala, Swahili, and other languages; capital, Kinshasa. Zaire is largely a low-lying forested region, encompassing the greater part of the Congo river basin; it is a major copper producer. Only gradually opened up by European exploration, the area became a Belgian colony, and was known as the Congo Free State (1885–1908) and the Belgian Congo (1908–60). Independence in 1960 was followed by civil war and UN intervention. General Mobutu seized control in a coup in 1965 and changed the name of the country from the Republic of the Congo to Zaire in 1971. From 1994 the ethnic violence in Rwanda spread to Zaire and there was a large influx of refugees, and incursions by Rwandan troops. Mobutu fled (1997) after forces supporting Laurent Kabila (1939–2001) entered Kinshasa. Zeno^{1} /'ziːnəʊ/ (fl. 5th century BC), Greek philosopher. Born in Elea in SW Italy, he was a member of the Eleatic school of philosophers and a pupil of Parmenides. He defended Parmenides' theories by formulating paradoxes which set out to demonstrate that motion and plurality are illusions. One of the best known of these is the paradox of Achilles and the tortoise, apparently refuting the existence of motion; it shows that once Achilles has given the tortoise a start he can never overtake it, since by the time he arrives where it was it has already moved on.

Zeno^{2} /'ziːnəʊ/ (known as Zeno of Citium) (*c.*335–*c.*263 BC), Greek philosopher, founder of Stoicism. Based in Athens from about 312, he was a pupil of Cynic philosophers before founding the school of Stoic philosophy in about 300 (see STOICISM). Zeno's influence on the development of Stoicism was considerable, particularly in the field of ethics, although all that remains of his treatises are fragments of quotations.

Zimbabwe /zɪm'bɑ:bwɪ, -weɪ/ a landlocked country in SE Africa, divided from Zambia by the Zambezi river; pop. (est. 1991) 10,080,000; languages, English (official), Shona, Ndebele, and other languages; capital, Harare. Formerly known as Southern Rhodesia (see RHODESIA), the country was a self-governing British colony from 1923. In 1965 the white minority government of the colony (then called Rhodesia) issued a unilateral declaration of independence (UDI) under its Prime Minister, Ian Smith. Despite UN sanctions, illegal independence lasted until 1979, when the Lancaster House Agreement led to all-party elections and black majority rule under Robert Mugabe. The country then became an independent republic and a member of the Commonwealth, taking its name from the centre of a black civilization of the 14th–15th centuries (see GREAT ZIMBABWE). □ Zimbabwean /-wɪən, -weɪən/ adj. & n.

Zimbabwe African National Union (abbr. ZANU, ZANU–PF) a Zimbabwean political party formed in 1963 as a guerrilla organization and led from 1975 by Robert Mugabe. Having formed an alliance (called the Patriotic Front) with ZAPU in 1976 to coordinate opposition to white rule, ZANU won a large majority in the first post-independence elections (1980). ZANU and ZAPU ruled Zimbabwe as a coalition until a rift developed between them in 1982; in 1987, however, the parties agreed formally to merge, adopting the name ZANU–PF on merger in 1989.

Zimbabwe African People's Union (abbr. ZAPU) a Zimbabwean political party formed in 1961 as a guerrilla organization and led by Joshua Nkomo. It merged with ZANU in 1989 (see also ZIMBABWE AFRICAN NATIONAL UNION).

(See note below.) b a representation of the signs of the zodiac or of a similar astrological system. 2 a complete cycle, circuit, or compass. □ sign of the zodiac each of twelve equal divisions of the zodiac (Aries, Taurus, Gemini, Cancer, Leo, Virgo, Libra, Scorpio, Sagittarius, Capricorn, Aquarius, and Pisces), originally containing the similarly named constellations. [ME f. OF zodiaque f. L zodiacus f. Gk zōidiakos f. zōidion sculptured animal-figure, dimin. of zōion animal]

- The seven moving celestial bodies known before modern times – the Sun, Moon, Mercury, Venus, Mars, Jupiter, and Saturn – all move within the zodiacal band, constantly changing their positions in relation to Earth and to each other, and the supposed interpretation of these movements forms the basis of astrology. However, the modern constellations no longer represent equal divisions of the zodiac, and the ecliptic now passes through a thirteenth (Ophiuchus). Also, owing to movement of the earth's axis (see PRECESSION), the signs of the zodiac now roughly correspond to the constellations that bear the names of the preceding signs (though astronomers use the names Scorpius and Capricornus).

zodiacal /zəˈdaɪək(ə)l/ adj. of or in the zodiac. [F (as ZODIAC)]

zodiacal light n. a very faint elongated cone of light sometimes seen in the night sky, extending from the horizon along the ecliptic. It is thought to be due to reflection of sunlight from minute particles of ice and dust within the plane of the solar system, and is most often seen in the west after evening twilight and in the east before morning twilight, esp. in the darkness of tropical skies.

zoetrope /ˈzəʊɪˌtrəʊp/ n. hist. an optical toy in the form of a cylinder with a series of pictures on the inner surface which give an impression of continuous motion when viewed through slits with the cylinder rotating. [irreg. f. Gk zōē life + -tropos turning]

Zoffany /ˈzofənɪ/, Johann (*c.*1733–1810), German-born painter, resident in England from 1758. Many of his earlier paintings depict scenes from the contemporary theatre, and feature the actor David Garrick (e.g. The Farmer's Return, 1762). Zoffany received the patronage of George III and painted several portraits of the royal family. The king also paid for Zoffany to visit Italy (1772–9), where he painted one of his best-known works, The Tribuna of the Uffizi (1772–80).

Zog I /zog/ (full name Ahmed Bey Zogu) (1895–1961), Albanian statesman and ruler, Prime Minister 1922–4, President 1925–8, and king 1928–39. A leader of the reformist Popular Party, he headed a republican government as Premier and later President, ultimately proclaiming himself king in 1928. Zog's autocratic rule resulted in a period of relative political stability, but the close links which he had cultivated with Italy from 1925 onwards led to increasing Italian domination of Albania, and when the country was invaded by Italy in 1939, Zog went into exile. He abdicated in 1946 after Albania became a Communist state, and died in France.

zoic /ˈzəʊɪk/ adj. 1 of or relating to animals. 2 Geol. (of rock etc.) containing fossils; with traces of animal or plant life. [prob. back-form. f. AZOIC]

Zola /ˈzəʊlə/, Émile (Édouard Charles Antoine) (1840–1902), French novelist and critic. Between 1871 and 1893 he published a series of twenty novels collectively entitled Les Rougon-Macquart; it includes Nana (1880), Germinal (1885), and La Terre (1887). The series chronicles in great detail the lives of the Rougon and Macquart families over several generations, and sets out to show how human behaviour is determined by environment and heredity. His collection of essays Le Roman expérimental (1880), which establishes an analogy between the novelist's aims and practices and those of the scientist, is regarded as the manifesto of naturalism. Zola is also remembered for his outspoken support of Alfred Dreyfus, most notably for his pamphlet J'accuse (1898).

zoology /zuːˈolədʒɪ, zəʊˈol-/ n. the scientific study of animals, esp. with reference to their structure, physiology, classification, and distribution. □ zoologist n. [mod.L zoologia (as ZOO-, -LOGY)]

▪ The systematic study of zoology began with the Greeks, stimulated by the works of Aristotle, and five of the eleven volumes of Pliny's Historia naturalis were on zoology. From the 17th to the early 19th centuries it became more scientifically based, due largely to the work of Harvey, Linnaeus, Buffon, and Cuvier. In the 19th century cell theory, histology, and biochemistry emerged, with major contributions also from Darwin, Wallace, and Mendel in the fields of evolution, zoogeography, and genetics. Today many zoologists are involved in laboratory-based studies in physiology, cytology, and embryology, while others study animal ecology or behaviour in the field. Classification and nomenclature remain a major field, particularly in entomology, where millions of species have yet to be discovered and there are important applications in pest research.

Zoroaster /ˌzorəʊˈæstə(r)/ (Avestan name Zarathustra) (*c.*628–*c.*551 BC), Persian prophet and founder of Zoroastrianism. Little is known of his life, but according to tradition he was born in Persia, and began to preach the tenets of what was later called Zoroastrianism after receiving a vision from Ahura Mazda. After his death he became the subject of many legends and was variously believed to have been a magician, an astrologer, a mathematician, and a philosopher.

Zoroastrianism /ˌzorəʊˈæstrɪəˌnɪz(ə)m/ n. a monotheistic pre-Islamic religion of ancient Persia (Iran) founded by Zoroaster (or Zarathustra) in the 6th century BC. According to the teachings of Zoroaster the supreme god, Ahura Mazda, created twin spirits, one of which chose truth and light, the other untruth and darkness. Later writings present a more dualistic cosmology in which the struggle is between Ahura Mazda (now called Ormazd) and the evil spirit Ahriman. The scriptures of Zoroastrianism are the Zend-Avesta. Zoroastrianism survives today in isolated areas of Iran and in India, where followers are known as Parsees. □ Zoroastrian adj. & n.

Zulu /ˈzuːluː/ n. & adj. ● n. 1 a member of a Bantu-speaking people forming the largest ethnic group in South Africa. (See note below.) 2 the language of this people, one of the major Bantu languages of southern Africa, spoken by about 6 million people. ● adj. of or relating to the Zulus or their language. [Zulu umzulu, pl. amazulu]

- The Zulus formed a powerful military empire in southern Africa during the 19th century before being defeated in a series of engagements with white Afrikaner and British settlers. Some Zulus still live under the traditional clan system in the province of KwaZulu/Natal, but many now work in the cities. In recent years the Zulu Inkatha movement has been drawn into violent clashes with other black groups in South Africa, particularly the Xhosa, and also into conflict with the outgoing government and the African National Congress in the period of transfer to majority rule, over future constitutional arrangements and demands for Zulu autonomy.

Zululand see KWAZULU.

Zurbarán /ˌzʊəbəˈrɑːn/, Francisco de (1598–1664), Spanish painter. In 1628 he became official painter to the town of Seville, where he spent much of his life; he also carried out commissions for many churches and for Philip IV, for whom he painted a series of mythological pictures The Labours of Hercules (1634) and a historical scene The Defence of Cadiz (1634). His work reflects the influence of Caravaggio and much of his subject-matter is religious; his other works include narrative series of scenes from the lives of the saints, painted with simple colour and form in a realistic style.

Zwingli /ˈtsvɪŋlɪ/, Ulrich (1484–1531), Swiss Protestant reformer, the principal figure of the Swiss Reformation. He was minister of Zurich from 1518, where he sought to carry through his political and religious reforms and met with strong local support. From 1522 he published articles advocating the liberation of believers from the control of the papacy and bishops, and upholding the Gospel as the sole basis of truth. He attacked the idea of purgatory, the invocation of saints, monasticism, and other orthodox doctrines. His beliefs differed most markedly from Luther's in his rejection of the latter's doctrine of consubstantiation: at a conference in Marburg in 1529, he upheld his belief that the significance of the Eucharist was purely symbolic. The spread of Zwingli's ideas in Switzerland met with fierce resistance in some regions, and Zwingli was killed in the resulting civil war.

MEDICAL SCIENCE

c.400 BC	Hippocrates brings medicine from the realm of magic and the supernatural into that of natural phenomena (Greece)
c.160	Galen shows that arteries contain blood, not air, and founds experimental physiology (Greece & Italy)
c.1050	Salerno medical school: Arabic expertise (Italy)
1363	Guy de Chauliac Chirurgia Magna: influential treatise on surgery (France)
1527	Paracelsus introduces chemical treatment of disease (Switzerland)
1628	circulation of the blood described by W. Harvey (Britain)
c.1676	presence of microbes first detected by A. van Leeuwenhoek (Holland)
1796	first effective vaccine (against smallpox) developed by E. Jenner (Britain)
1816	monaural stethoscope designed by R. Laënnec (France)
1842	ether first used as an anaesthetic by C. Long (US)
1860	pasteurization developed by L. Pasteur (France)
1863–4	clinical thermometer introduced by W. Aitken (UK)
1865	germ theory of disease published by L. Pasteur (France)
1867	first antiseptic operation performed by J. Lister (UK)
1885	cholera bacillus identified by R. Koch (Germany)
c.1891	P. Ehrlich pioneers chemotherapy (Germany)
1895	X-rays discovered by W. Röntgen (Germany)
1897	first synthetic aspirin produced (Germany)
1898	medical effects of radiation discovered by P. and M. Curie (France)
1901	blood groups discovered by K. Landsteiner (Austria)
1921–2	insulin isolated by F. Banting and C. Best (Canada)
1922	tuberculosis (BCG) vaccine developed by L. Calmette and G. Guérin (France)
1928	penicillin discovered by A. Fleming (UK)
1929	iron lung designed by P. Drinker and C. McKhann (US)
1932	first sulphonamide antibiotic developed by G. Domagk (Germany)
1938–40	penicillin isolated by H. Florey (Australia) and E. Chain (Germany)
1945	artificial kidney first used on a human (Holland)
1950	first successful kidney transplant performed by R. Lawler (US)
1955	ultrasound successfully used in body scanning by I. Donald (UK)
1958	first internal cardiac pacemaker implanted (Sweden)
1960	contraceptive pill first available (US)
1967	first heart transplant performed by C. Barnard (S. Africa)
1971	CAT (computerized axial tomography) scanner developed (UK)
1978	first test-tube baby born (UK)
1980	World Health Organization declares the world free of smallpox from 1 January 1980
1983	HIV or human immunodeficiency virus identified as responsible for causing Aids (US & France)
1991	implantation of artificial lung (UK)
1994	identification of genes responsible for familial breast cancer (US, UK)

TELECOMMUNICATIONS REVOLUTION

1835	Morse code invented by S. Morse (US)
1837	electric telegraph patented by W. Cooke and C. Wheatstone (UK)
1839	first commercial telegraph line installed in London (UK)
1848	Associated Press news wire service begins in New York
1851	first underwater cable laid under the English Channel
1851	Reuters news wire service begins in London (UK)
1858	first transatlantic cable laid between Ireland and Newfoundland
1858	automatic telegraph system patented by C. Wheatstone (UK)
1872	duplex telegraphy patented by J. Stearns (US)
1876	telephone patented by A. G. Bell (US)
1877	phonograph developed by T. Edison (US)
1878	first telephone exchange opened in Connecticut (US)
1887	radio waves demonstrated by H. Hertz (Germany)
1889	first automatic telephone exchange introduced (US)
1891	discs for recording sound pioneered by E. Berliner (Germany)
1895	G. Marconi (Italy) demonstrates radio transmission
1897	cathode-ray tube invented by K. F. Braun (Germany)
1898	machine for magnetic recording of sound patented by V. Poulsen (Denmark)
1901	G. Marconi (Italy) sends radio signals across the Atlantic
1907	triode valve patented by L. De Forest (US)
1921–3	regular public radio broadcasting established (UK, US)
1926	television first demonstrated by J. L. Baird (UK)
1927	first transatlantic telephone links opened between London and New York
1928	magnetic tape introduced by F. Pfleumer (Germany)
1936	black and white television service introduced by the BBC (UK)
1950	stereophonic sound reproduction from magnetic tape
1953	colour television successfully transmitted in US
1954	first transistor radio developed by Regency Company (US)
1956	video tape recorder developed by Ampex (US)
1960	Echo and Courier satellites (US) launched to relay first satellite telephone calls between US and Europe
1962	Telstar satellite (US) relays first transatlantic television broadcast
1963	cassette tapes introduced
1966	fibre-optic cables for telephone links pioneered by K. Kao and G. Hockham (UK)
1968	pulse code modulation system installed in London (UK)
1969	first message sent between computers; ARPAnet, predecessor of the Internet, established, at first with 4 hosts (US)
1970	videodisc introduced by Decca (UK) and AEG (Germany)
1972	first domestic video cassette system (Betamax) introduced by Sony (Japan)
1980s	teletext system developed and introduced in Europe
1980s	direct broadcasting by satellite
1982	compact disc produced by Philips (Holland) and Sony (Japan)

1985	cellular telephone system launched in UK
1988	Switch EFTPOS system introduced (UK)
1991	World Wide Web established by Tim Berners-Lee (CERN, Switzerland)
1995	DVD (digital versatile disc) introduced by Philips and Sony
1999	WAP (Wireless Application Protocol) mobile phones used to access Internet
2000	number of Internet hosts passes 100 million

SPACE EXPLORATION

1903	theory of rocket propulsion published by K. Tsiolkovsky (Russia)
1926	first liquid-fuel rocket launched by R. Goddard (US)
1944	V-2 rocket, forerunner of space rockets, first used (Germany)
1949	first multi-stage rocket launched in US
1957	a satellite, Sputnik 1 (USSR), first put into earth orbit
1957	satellite, Sputnik 2 (USSR) carries the first space traveller, the dog Laika
1958	US puts a satellite, Explorer 1, into orbit
1959	space probe Luna 2 (USSR) reaches the moon
1961	Y. Gagarin becomes the first man in space in Vostok 1 (USSR)
1962–77	Mariner space probes (US) to Venus, Mars, and Mercury
1963	V. Tereshkova becomes the first woman in space in Vostok 6 (USSR)
1965	A. Leonov makes the first walk in space from Voskhod 2 (USSR)
1966	first moon landing, by space probe Luna 9 (USSR)
1966	N. Armstrong and D. Scott in Gemini 8 (US) make the first docking in space
1968	F. Borman, J. Lovell, and W. Anders orbit the moon in Apollo 8 (US)
1969	N. Armstrong and E. Aldrin make the first manned lunar landing in the lunar module Eagle, with M. Collins in the command module of Apollo 11 (US)
1971	Soyuz 10 and Salyut 1 (USSR) dock in orbit to form the first space station
1972	Apollo 17, last of six US moon landings
1973	Skylab (US) launched
1976	Viking 1 (US) lands on Mars
1977	Space Shuttle Enterprise (US) makes first test flight
1977	Voyagers 1 and 2 (US) leave to fly by Jupiter (1979) and Saturn (1981). Voyager 2 continues to Uranus (1986) and Neptune (1989)
1981	Space Shuttle Columbia (US) makes the first shuttle mission
1983	European Spacelab launched into orbit
1986	European space probe Giotto investigates Halley's Comet
1986	Space Shuttle Challenger (US) explodes killing seven astronauts
1990	Hubble Space Telescope launched into orbit
1990–4	Magellan (US) sends back radar images of Venus
1995	Galileo (US) reaches Jupiter
1998	construction of International Space Station begins
2001	Russian space station Mir (launched 1987) crashes into Pacific

COMPUTER TECHNOLOGY

1642	machine for adding and subtracting designed by B. Pascal (France)
1674	machine for multiplying and dividing designed by G. Leibniz (Germany)
1834	'analytical engine' designed by C. Babbage (UK)
1849	representation of logical events by symbols enumerated by G. Boole (UK)
1855	calculating engine constructed by G. Schentz (Sweden) and exhibited at the Paris Exhibition
1889	punched-card machine patented by H. Hollerith (US) and used to tabulate the results of the US census
1924	Tabulating Machine Company of the US becomes International Business Machines (IBM)
1943	code-breaking machine Colossus conceived by A. Turing (UK)
1945	Electronic Numerical Integrator and Calculator (ENIAC) designed by P. Eckert and J. Maunchly (US)
1947	transistor invented by W. Shockley and others at Bell Laboratories (US)
1948	first computer, Manchester Mark I, installed at Manchester University (UK)
1949–50	printed electronic circuits developed
1954	first high-level programming language (Fortran) published by IBM (US)
1958	first integrated circuit (or silicon chip) produced (US)
1964	first word processor introduced by IBM (US)
1965	first minicomputer produced (US)
1971	microprocessor introduced by Intel (US)
1972	first pocket calculator introduced (UK)
1975	first portable computer produced by Altair (US)
1978	magnetic discs first introduced by Oyz (US)
1979	first videotext information system, Prestel, launched by British Telecom (UK)
1980s	RISC (Reduced Instruction Set Computer) chip developed by Intel (US)
1981	desktop microcomputer (IBM-PC) introduced by IBM (US)
1983	Esprit (European Strategic Programme for Research and Information Technology) established by the EEC to coordinate the European Information Technology industry
1984	Apple Macintosh microcomputer with mouse and window user interface (US)
1984	CD-ROM (compact disc read-only memory) introduced as data storage device
1985	transputer manufactured by Inmos (UK)
1985	optical fibres first used to link mainframe computers (US)
1986	high-temperature superconductors discovered at IBM laboratories (Zurich), with potential for superconducting computers in the future
1991	Apple Macintosh PowerBook laptop microcomputer, able to function as a desktop (US)
1992	Pentium processor introduced by Intel (US)
1993	Microsoft (US) launches Windows NT, self-contained portable operating system with networking and multitasking

Appendix 3 Countries of the World

Population figures are based on 2002 estimates.

Independent countries

Country	Capital	Area (sq. km)	Population	Currency unit
Afghanistan	Kabul	648,000	27,755,775	afghani = 100 puls
Albania	Tirana	28,700	3,544,841	lek = 100 qintars
Algeria	Algiers	2,319,000	32,277,942	dinar = 100 centimes

Appendix 12 The Beaufort Scale of Wind Force

	Equivalent speed at 10m above ground
Beaufort number	Knots	Kilometres per hour	Description of wind	Specifications for use at sea	Specifications for use on land
0	< 1	< 1	Calm	Sea like a mirror	Calm, smoke rises vertically
1	1–3	1–6	Light air	Ripples with the appearance of scales formed but without foam crests	Direction of wind shown by smoke drift, but not by wind vanes
2	4–6	7–12	Light breeze	Small wavelets, still short but more pronounced; crests have a glassy appearance and do not break	Wind felt on face; leaves rustle; ordinary vane moved by wind
3	7–10	13–19	Gentle breeze	Large wavelets; crests begin to break; foam of glassy appearance; perhaps scattered white horses	Leaves and small twigs in constant motion; wind extends light flag
4	11–16	20–30	Moderate breeze	Small waves, becoming longer; fairly frequent white horses	Raises dust and loose paper; small branches moved
5	17–21	31–39	Fresh breeze	Moderate waves, taking a more pronounced long form; many white horses are formed; chance of some spray	Small trees in leaf begin to sway; crested wavelets form on inland waters
6	22–27	40–50	Strong breeze	Large waves begin to form; the white foam crests are more extensive everywhere; probably some spray	Large branches in motion; whistling heard in telegraph wires; umbrellas used with difficulty
7	28–33	51–62	Near gale	Sea heaps up and white foam from breaking waves begins to be blown in streaks along the direction of the wind	Whole trees in motion; inconvenience felt when walking against wind
8	34–40	63–74	Gale	Moderately high waves of greater length; edges of crests begin to break into spindrift; the foam is blown in well-marked streaks along the direction of the wind	Breaks twigs off trees; generally impedes progress
9	41–47	75–87	Strong gale	High waves; dense streaks of foam along the direction of the wind; crests of waves begin to topple, tumble, and roll over; spray may affect visibility	Slight structural damage occurs (chimney-pots and slates removed)
10	48–55	88–102	Storm	Very high waves with long overhanging crests; the resulting foam, in great patches, is blown in dense white streaks along the direction of the wind; on the whole, the surface of the sea takes a white appearance; the tumbling of the sea becomes heavy; visibility affected	Seldom experienced inland; trees uprooted; considerable structural damage occurs
11	56–63	103–117	Violent storm	Exceptionally high waves (small and medium-sized ships might be for a time lost to view behind the waves); the sea is completely covered with long white patches of foam lying along the direction of the wind; everywhere the edges of the wave crests are blown into froth; visibility affected	Very rarely experienced; accompanied by widespread damage
12	≥ 64	≥ 118	Hurricane	The air is filled with foam and spray; sea completely white with driving spray; visibility very seriously affected	–

magnetic flux density	tesla	T
luminous flux	lumen	lm
illumination	lux	lx

4. TEMPERATURE

Fahrenheit: Water boils (under standard conditions) at 212° and freezes at 32°.
Celsius or Centigrade: Water boils at 100° and freezes at 0°.
Kelvin: Water boils at 373.15 Kelvins and freezes at 273.15 Kelvins.

Celsius	Fahrenheit
− 17.8°	0°
− 10°	14°
0°	32°
10°	50°
20°	68°
30°	86°
40°	104°
50°	122°
60°	140°
70°	158°
80°	176°
90°	194°
100°	212°

To convert Celsius into Fahrenheit: multiply by 9, divide by 5, and add 32.
To convert Fahrenheit into Celsius: subtract 32, multiply by 5, and divide by 9.

5. METRIC PREFIXES

	Abbreviation or symbol	Factor
deca-	da	10
hecto-	h	10^2
kilo-	k	10^3
mega-	M	10^6
giga-	G	10^9
tera-	T	10^{12}
peta-	P	10^{15}
exa-	E	10^{18}
deci-	d	10^{-1}
centi-	c	10^{-2}
milli-	m	10^{-3}
micro-	μ	10^{-6}
nano-	n	10^{-9}
pico-	p	10^{-12}
femto-	f	10^{-15}
atto-	a	10^{-18}

Pronunciations and derivations of these are given at their alphabetical places in the dictionary. They may be applied to any units of the metric system: hectogram (abbr. hg) = 100 grams; kilowatt (abbr. kW) = 1,000 watts; megahertz (MHz) = 1 million hertz; centimetre (cm) = 1/100 metre; microvolt (μV) = one millionth of a volt; picofarad (pF) = 10^{-12} farad. They are also sometimes applied to other units (megabit, microinch).

6. POWER NOTATION

This expresses concisely any power of ten (any number that is composed of factors 10), and is sometimes used in the dictionary. 10^2 or ten squared = 10 × 10 = 100; 10^3 or ten cubed = 10 × 10 × 10 = 1,000. Similarly, $10^4 = 10{,}000$ and 10^{10} = 1 followed by ten noughts = 10,000,000,000. Proceeding in the opposite direction, dividing by ten and subtracting one from the index, we have $10^2 = 100$, $10^1 = 10$, $10^0 = 1$, $10^{-1} = 1/10$, $10^{-2} = 1/100$, and so on; $10^{-10} = 1/10^{10} = 1/10{,}000{,}000{,}000$.

7. BINARY SYSTEM

Only two units (0 and 1) are used, and the position of each unit indicates a power of two.

One to ten written in binary form:

	eights (2^3)	fours (2^2)	twos (2^1)	one
1				1
2			1	0
3			1	1
4		1	0	0
5		1	0	1
6		1	1	0
7		1	1	1
8	1	0	0	0
9	1	0	0	1
10	1	0	1	0

i.e. ten is written as 1010 $(2^3 + 0 + 2^1 + 0)$; one hundred is written as 1100100 $(2^6 + 2^5 + 0 + 0 + 2^2 + 0 + 0)$

Appendix 18 Terms for Groups of Animals etc.

Terms marked † belong to 15th-century lists of 'proper terms', notably that in the Book of St Albans attributed to Dame Juliana Barnes (1486). Many of these are fanciful or humorous terms which probably never had any real currency, but have been taken up by Joseph Strutt in Sports and Pastimes of England (1801) and by other antiquarian writers.

a †shrewdness of apes
a herd or †pace of asses
a †cete of badgers
a †sloth or †sleuth of bears a hive of bees; a swarm, drift, or bike of bees a flock, flight, (dial.) parcel, pod, †fleet, or †dissimulation of (small) birds; a volary of birds in an aviary
a sounder of wild boar
a †blush of boys
a herd or gang of buffalo
a †clowder or †glaring of cats; a †dowt (=?do-out) or †destruction of wild cats a herd, drove, (dial.) drift, or (US & Austral.) mob of cattle a brood, (dial.) cletch or clutch, or †peep of chickens a †chattering or †clattering of choughs
a †drunkship of cobblers
a †rag or †rake of colts
a †hastiness of cooks
a †covert of coots
a herd of cranes
a litter of cubs
a herd of curlew
a †cowardice of curs
a herd or mob of deer
a pack or kennel of dogs
a trip of dotterel
a flight, †dole, or †piteousness of doves a raft, bunch, or †paddling of ducks on water; a team of wild ducks in flight a fling of dunlins
a herd of elephants
a herd or (US) gang of elk a †business of ferrets
a charm or †chirm of finches
a shoal of fish; a run of fish in motion a cloud of flies
a †stalk of foresters
a †skulk of foxes
a gaggle or (in the air) a skein, team, or wedge of geese
a herd of giraffes
a flock, herd, or (dial.) trip of goats
a pack or covey of grouse
a †husk or †down of hares
a cast of hawks let fly
an †observance of hermits
a †siege of herons
a stud or †haras of (breeding) horses; (dial.) a team of horses a kennel, pack, cry or †mute of hounds a flight or swarm of insects
a mob or troop of kangaroos
a kindle of kittens
a bevy of ladies
a †desert of lapwing
an †exaltation or bevy of larks
a †leap of leopards
a pride of lions
a †tiding of magpies
a †sord or †sute (=suit) of mallard a †richesse of martens
a †faith of merchants
a †labour of moles
a troop of monkeys
a †barren of mules
a †watch of nightingales
a †superfluity of nuns
a covey of partridges
a †muster of peacocks
a †malapertness (=impertinence) of pedlars
a rookery of penguins
a head or (dial.) nye of pheasants a kit of pigeons flying together a herd of pigs
a stand, wing, or †congregation of plovers
a rush or flight of pochards
a herd, pod, or school of porpoises a †pity of prisoners
a covey of ptarmigan
a litter of pups
a bevy or drift of quail
a string of racehorses an †unkindness of ravens
a bevy of roe deer
a parliament or †building of rooks
a hill of ruffs
a herd or rookery of seals; a pod of seals a flock, herd, (dial.) drift or trip, or (Austral.) mob of sheep a †dopping of sheldrake
a wisp or †walk of snipe
a †host of sparrows
a †murmuration of starlings
a flight of swallows a game or herd of swans; a wedge of swans in the air a herd of swine; a †sounder of tame swine, a †drift of wild swine a †glozing (=fawning) of taverners a †spring of teal
a bunch or knob of waterfowl a school, herd, or gam of whales; a pod of whales; a grind of bottlenosed whales a company or trip of wigeon a bunch, trip, or plump of wildfowl; a knob (less than 30) of wildfowl a pack or †rout of wolves a gaggle of women (derog.)
a †fall of woodcock a herd of wrens

750 i.e. 18 carat 75%
916 22 carat 91.6%
585 14 carat 58.5%
375 9 carat 37.5%

(prior to 1975 marks incorporated the carat figure, and Scottish 18 and 22 carat gold bore a thistle mark instead of the crown)

Date letter (from 1478)

one letter per year before changing to next style of letter and/or shield cycles vary between Assay Offices

London date letters (A-U used, excluding J) showing style of first letter and years of cycle

	1498–1518[1]		1598–1618		1697[3]–1716		1796–1816		1896–1916
	1518–1538		1618–1638		1716–1736		1816–1836		1916–1936

Notes
1. Letter changed on 19 May until 1697
2. No U used in these cycles
3. A from 27 March to 28 May 1697; year letters then changed on 29 May until 1975
4. Year letter changed with each calendar year; from 1975 all UK Offices use the same date letters and shield shape
5. A special millennium mark was used in 1999–2000; another series of date letters began in 2001

About the Oxford English Dictionary

Oxford maintains a continuous program of research into changes in the English language, as well as further study of its historical development. Oxford offers the only dictionary range that combines unrivaled scholarship with accessibility for a general readership.

The Oxford English Dictionary (OED), like its abridged version, the Shorter Oxford English Dictionary, is written on historical principles and traces the development of each word's meaning and form from its first appearance in English. Oxford's other English dictionaries, following the style of the ground-breaking New Oxford Dictionary of English (1998), present words according to their use and frequency in modern English.

The Second Edition of the OED is available as a 20-volume print edition and on CD-ROM, and now also online at www.oed.com. Updated quarterly with at least 1,500 new and revised entries, OED Online offers unparalleled access to the 'greatest continuing work of scholarship that this century has produced' (Newsweek).

With its wide range of dictionaries both in print and electronic form, Oxford meets all dictionary-user needs.
